SK I

The dogmatist is sure of every thing, and the skeptick believes nothing. Watts's Logick.
SKEPTICAL. adj. [from skeptick.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the skeptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help. Bentley.
SKEPTICISM. n. f. [scepticisme, French, from skeptick.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.

I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way. Dryden.
SKETCH. n. f. [schœula, Latin.] An outline; a rough draught; a first plan.

I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it. Addison.
 As the lightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
 Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd,
 So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.

TO SKETCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw, by tracing the outline.

If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design sketched out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael. Watts's Logick.

TO PLAN, by giving the first or principal notion.
 The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketch'd, and which every man must finish for himself. Dryden's Duress.

SKEWER. n. f. [skere, Danish.] A wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.

Sweet breeds and collops were with skewers prick'd about the sides. Dryden's Iliad.

From his rug the skewer he takes,
 And on the stick ten equal notches makes. Swift.

I once may overlook,
 A skewer sent to table by my cook. King.

Send up meat well stuck with skewers, to make it look round; and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handiomer. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

TO SKEWER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with skewers.

SKIFF. n. f. [skiffe, French; capba, Lat.] A small light boat. If in two skiffs of cork, a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the one doth not move, the other standing still; but both steer into each other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main,
 Choak'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train. Dryden.

On Garway cliffs
 A savage race by shipwreck fed,
 Lie waiting for the founder'd skiffs,
 And strip the bodies of the dead. Swift.

SKILFUL. adj. [skill and full.] Knowing; qualified with skill; possessing any art; dextrous; able.

His father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold and silver. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

They shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation, to wailing. Amos v. 16.

Will Vaser is skilful at finding out the ridiculous side of a thing, and placing it in a new light. Tatler.

Say, Stella, feel you no content,
 Reflecting on a life well spent;
 Your skilful hand employ'd to save Despairing wretches from the grave:
 And then supporting with your store
 Those whom you dragg'd from death before. Swift.

Instructors should not only be skilful in those sciences which they teach; but have skill in the method of teaching, and patience in the practice. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

SKILFULLY. adv. [from skilful.] With skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dextrously.

As soon as he came near me, in fit distance, with much fury, but with fury skilfully guided, he ran upon me. Sidney.

Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as skilfully as a shipwright. Broome.

SKILFULNESS. n. f. [from skilful.] Art; ability; dextrousness.

He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands. Psalms lxxviii. 72.

SKILL. n. f. [skil, Islandick.] Knowledge of any practice or art; readiness in any practice; knowledge; dexterity; artfulness.

Skill in the weapon is nothing without fact. Shakespeare.

You have
 As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
 To put you to't. Shakespeare.

Of nothing profits more Than self-esteem grounded on just and right,
 Well manag'd; of that skill the more thou know'st,
 The more the will acknowledge thee her head. Milton.

I will from wondrous principles ordain
 A race unlike the first, and try my skill again. Dryden.

SKI

Phocion the Athenian general, then ambassador from the state, by his great wisdom and skill at negotiations, diverted Alexander from the conquest of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour. Swift.

2. Any particular art.
 Learned in one skill, and in another kind of learning unskilful. Hobbes.

TO SKILL. v. n. [skilia, Islandick.] To be knowing in; to be dextrous at.

They that skill not of heavenly matter,
 All that they know not, envy or admire. Spenser.

The overseers were all that could skill of instruments of music. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12.

One man of wisdom, experience, learning, and direction, may judge better in those things that he can skill of, than ten thousand others that be ignorant. Whitgift.

2. [Skilia, Islandick, signifies to distinguish.] To differ; to make difference; to interest; to matter. Not in use.

Whether the commandments of God in scripture be general or special, it skilleth not. Hobbes.

What skill it is, if a bag of stones or gold
 About thy neck do drown thee? raise thy head,
 Take stars for money; stars not to be told,
 By any art: yet to be purchas'd.

None is so wailful as the scraping dame,
 She loathes three for one; her foul, rest, fame. Horace.

He intending not to make a summer business of it, but a resolute war, without term prefixed, until he had recovered France, it skilled not much when he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter. Bacon.

SKILLED. adj. [from skill.] Knowing; dextrous; acquainted with.

Of these nor skilled nor studious. Milton.

Moses, in all the Egyptian arts was skill'd,
 When heav'nly power that chosen vessel fill'd. Denham.

He must be very little skill'd in the world, who thinks that a voluble tongue shall accompany only a good understanding. Locke.

SKILLLESS. adj. [from skill.] Wanting art. Not in use.

Nor have I seen
 More that I may call men than you:
 How features are abroad I'm skilful of. Shakespeare.

Jealously what might befall your travel,
 Being skilful in these parts; which to a stranger Unguided and unfriended, often prove Rough and unhopitable. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
 Mithapen in the conduct of them both,
 Like powder in a skilful soldier's flask
 Is set on fire. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

SKILLET. n. f. [secullette, French.] A small kettle or boiler.

When light-wing'd toys
 Of feather'd Cupid foil with wanton dullness
 My speculative and offic'd instruments,
 Let house-wives make a skillet of my helm,
 And all indign and base advertities
 Make head against my estimation. Shakespeare's Othello.

Break all the wax, and in a kettle or skillet set it over a soft fire. Mortimer's English.

SKILT. n. f. [A word used by Cleaveland, of which I know not either the etymology or meaning.]

Smeitymus! ha! what art?
 Syriack? Or Arabick? Or Welsh? What skilt?
 Ape all the bricklayers that Babel built. Cleaveland.

TO SKIM. v. a. [properly to scum, from scum; scums, French.]

1. To clear off from the upper part, by passing a vessel a little below the surface.

My coz Tom, or his coz Mary,
 Who hold the plough or skim the dairy,
 My fav'rite books, and pictures sell. Prior.

2. To take by skimming.

She boils in kettles must of wine, and skims
 With leaves the dregs that overflow the brims. Dryden.

His principal studies were after the works of Titian, whose cream he has skim'd. Dryden's Duress.

The surface of the sea is covered with its bubbles, while it rises, which they skim off into their boats, and afterwards separate in pots. Addison.

Whilome I've seen her skim the cloated cream,
 And press from spongy curds the milky stream. Gay.

3. To brush the surface slightly; to pass very near the surface.

Nor seeks in air her humble flight to raise,
 Content to skim the surface of the seas. Dryden.

The swallow skims the river's wat'ry face.
 A winged eastern blast just skimming o'er
 The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore. Prior.

4. To cover superficially. Improper.

Dang'rous flats in secret ambush lay,
 Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
 And scamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.

SKI

TO SKIM. v. n. To pass lightly; to glide along.

Thin airy shapes o'er the furrows rise,
 A dreadful scene! and skim before his eyes. Addison.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
 The line too labours, and the words move slow;
 Not to when swift Camilla scours the plain,
 Flies o'er the unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

Such as have active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile spirit, will fix nothing in their memory. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

They skim over a science in a very superficial survey, and never lead their disciples into the depths of it. Watts.

The boat, light skimming, stretch'd his oary wings. Thomson.

SKIMBLESKAMBLE. adj. [A cant word formed by reduplication from skamble.] Wandering; wild.

A couching lion and a ramping cat,
 And such a deal of skimble-skamble stuff,
 As puts me from my faith. Shakespeare.

SKIMMER. n. f. [from skim.] A shallow vessel with which the scum is taken off.

Wash your wheat in three or four waters, stirring it round; and with a skimmer, each time, take off the light. Mortimer.

SKIMMILK. n. f. [skim and milk.] Milk from which the cream has been taken.

Then cheese was brought: says Slouch, this e'en shall roll;
 This is skimmilk, and therefore it shall go. King.

SKIN. n. f. [skind, Danish.]

1. The natural covering of the flesh. It consists of the cuticle, outward skin, or scarf skin, which is thin and insensible, and the cutis, or inner skin, extremely sensible.

The body is confuted to nothing, the skin feeling rough and dry like leather. Harvey on Consumptions.

The priest on skins of off-rings takes his ease,
 And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryden's Æn.

2. Hide; pelt; that which is taken from animals to make parchment or leather.

3. The body; the person.

We meet with many of these dangerous civilities, wherein 'tis hard for a man to save both his skin and his credit. L'Estr.

TO SKIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To flay; to strip or divest of the skin.

The beavers run to the door to make their escape, are there intangled in the nets, seized by the Indians, and immediately skinned. Ellis's Voyage.

2. To cover with the skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
 Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
 Infects unseen. Shakespeare.

Authority, though it err like others,
 Has yet a kind of medicine in itself,
 That skins the vice o' th' top. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

The wound was skinned; but the strength of his thigh was not restored. Dryden.

It only patches up and skins it over, but reaches not to the bottom of the sore. Locke.

The last stage of healing, or skinning over, is called cicatrization. Sharp's Surgery.

3. To cover superficially.

What I took for solid earth was only heaps of rubbish, skinned over with a covering of vegetables. Addison.

SKINK. n. f. [cenc, Saxon.]

1. Drink; any thing potable.

2. Pottage.

Scotch skink, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and sinews of beef, but long boiled: jelly also of knuckles of veal. Bacon's Nat. History.

TO SKINK. v. n. [cencan, Saxon.] To serve drink. Both noun and verb are wholly obsolete.

SKINKER. n. f. [from skink.] One that serves drink.

I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under skinker; one that never spake other English in his life, than eight shillings and six pence, and you are welcome, fir. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Hang up all the poor hop-drinkers,
 Cries old Sym, the king of skinkers. Ben. Jonson.

His mother took the cup the clown had fill'd;
 The reconciler bowl went round the board,
 Which, empty'd, the rude skinker still restor'd. Dryden.

SKINNED. adj. [from skin.] Having the nature of skin or leather hard; callous.

When the ulcer becomes foul, and discharges a nasty ichor, the edges in process of time tuck in, and, growing skinned and hard, give it the name of callous. Sharp's Surgery.

SKINNER. n. f. [from skin.] A dealer in skins.

SKINNINESS. n. f. [from skinny.] The quality of being skinny.

SKINNY. adj. [from skin.] Consisting only of skin; wanting flesh.

Her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Least the asperity of these cartilages of the windpipe should hurt the gullet, which is tender, and of a skinny substance, these annular griffles are not made round; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way. Roy on the Creation.

His fingers meet
 In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison's Ovid.

TO SKIP. v. n. [scittire, Italian; esquiver, French.] I know not whether it may not come from scapes.

1. To fetch quick bounds; to pass by quick leaps; to bound lightly and joyfully.

Was not Israel a derision unto thee? Was he found among thieves? For since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy. Jer. xlviii. 27.

The queen, bound with love's powerful charm,
 Sat with Pigwigen arm in arm:
 Her merry maids, that thought no harm,
 About the room were skipping. Drayton.

At spur or switch no more he skips,
 Or mended pace, than Spaniard whipt. Hudibras.

The earth-born race
 O'er ev'ry hill and verdant pasture stray, Skip o'er the lawns, and by the rivers play. Blackmore.

John skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, peeping into every cranny. Arbutnot. Hist. of J. Bull.

Thus each hand promotes the pleasing pain,
 And quick sensations skip from vein to vein. Pope's Dunciad.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day,
 Had he thy reason, would he skip and play? Pope.

2. To pass without notice.

Pope Pius II. was wont to say, that the former popes did wisely to let the lawyers a-work to debate, whether the donation of Constantine the Great to Sylvester of St. Peter's patrimony were good or valid in law or no; the better to skip over the matter in fact, whether there was ever any such thing at all or no. Bacon's Apophthegms.

A gentleman made it a rule, in reading, to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. Swift.

TO SKIP. v. a. [esquiver, French.] To miss; to pass.

Let not thy sword skip one:

Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;
 He is an usurer. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

Although to engage very far in such a metaphysical speculation were unfit, when I only endeavour to explicate fluidity, yet we dare not quite skip it over, lest we be accused of overlooking it. Boyle.

They who have a mind to see the issue may skip these two chapters, and proceed to the following. Burnet.

SKIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A light leap or bound.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he had said his strength had not yet forsaken him. Sidney.

You will make so large a skip as to cast yourself from the land into the water. More's Antidote against Atheism.

SKIPPACK. n. f. [skip and jack.] An upstart.

The want of shame or brains does not presently entitle every little skippack to the board's end in the cabinet. L'Estr.

SKIPPENNEL. n. f. [skip and kennel.] A lackey; a footboy.

SKIPPER. n. f. [schipper, Dutch.] A shipmaster or shipboy.

Are not you afraid of being drowned too? No, not I, says the skipper. L'Estrange.

No doubt you will return very much improved. — Yes, refined like a Dutch skipper from a whale-fishing. Congreve.

SKIPPET. n. f. [Probably from skiff.] A small boat.

Upon the bank they fitting did espy
 A dainty damsel, dressing of her hair,
 By whom a little skippet floating did appear. Fairy Queen.

SKIRMISH. n. f. [from ys and carm, Welsh, the shout of war: whence ysgarm, and ysgarmer, old British words. Maes a new 'sgarmes a woman, says an ancient writer. Esfarmouchet, French.]

1. A slight fight: less than a set battle.

One battle, yes, a skirmish more there was
 With adverse fortune fought by Cartimand;
 Her subjects most revolt. Philips's Briton.

2. A contest; a contention.

There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit. Shakespeare.

These skirmishes expire not with the first propugners of the opinions: they perhaps began as single duellers; but then they soon have their partisans and abettors, who not only enhance, but entail the feud to posterity. Decay of Piety.

TO SKIRMISH. v. n. [esfarmouchet, French; from the noun.] To fight loosely; to fight in parties before or after the shock of the main battle.

Ready to charge, and to retire at will;
 Though broken, scatter'd, fled, they skirmish still. Fairfax.

A gentleman volunteer, skirmishing with the enemy before Worcester, was run through his arm in the middle of the biceps with a sword, and shot with a musket-bullet in the same shoulder. Wiceman's Surgery.

I'll pass by the little skirmishings on either side. Atterbury.

SKIRMISHER. n. f. [from skirmish.] He who skirmishes. Ans.

TO SKIRRE. v. a. [This word seems to be derived from scir, Saxon, pure, clean; unless it shall be rather deduced from scirlaw.] To scour; to ramble over in order to clear.

SKR

- Send out more horses, skirre the country round;
Hang those that talk of fear. Shakep. Macbeth.
- To SKIRRE. v. n. To scour; to feud; to run in haste.
We'll make them skirre away as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shakep. Henry V.
- SKIRRET. n. f. [skirum, Latin.] A plant.
It produces its flowers in an umbel, which consists of several leaves placed circularly, and expanded in form of a rose: the empalement afterward becomes a fruit, composed of two narrow seeds, that are gibbous, and furrowed on one side, but plain on the other. The roots are shaped like long turneps, and are joined to one head. Miller.
- Skirrets* are a sort of roots propagated by feed. Mortimer.
- SKIRT. n. f. [skorte, Swedish.]
1. The loose edge of a garment; that part which hangs loose below the waist.
It's but a nightgown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, fide sleeves and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel. Shakep. Much Ado about Nothing.
As Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent. 1 Sa. xv. 27.
 2. The edge of any part of the dress.
A narrow lace, or a small skirt of ruffled linen, which runs along the upper part of the stays before, and crosses the breast, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.
 3. Edge; margin; border; extreme part.
He should seat himself at Athie, upon the skirt of that unquiet country. Spenser on Ireland.
- Ye mists, that rise
From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,
'Till the fun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
In honour to the world's great Author rise. Milton.
- Though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milt. Parad. Lost.

- SKUE. adj. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory derivation.] Oblique; fide long. It is most used in the adverb askue.
Several have imagined that this skue posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing; and that if the poles had been erect to the plane of the ecliptic, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise. Bentley.
- To SKULK. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice.
Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away. Dryden.
- SKULL. n. f. [skiola, Islandick; skutti, Islandick, a head.]
1. The bone that incloses the head: it is made up of several pieces, which being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contain the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain. Its figure is round, and a little depressed on its sides. The several pieces, of which the skull is composed, are joined together by sutures, which makes it less apt to break: these pieces or bones are six proper and two common, and each is made up of two tables, or laminae, between which there is a thin and spongy substance, made of some bony fibres, which come from each lamina, called in Greek διπλαει, and in Latin medullarium. In it are a great many veins and arteries, which bring blood for the nourishment of the bones. The tables are hard and solid, because in them the fibres of the bones are close to one another. The diploe is soft, because the bony fibres are at a greater distance from one another. The external lamina is smooth, and covered with the pericranium: the internal is likewise smooth; but on it are several furrows, made by the pulse of the arteries of the dura mater, whilst the cranium was soft and yielding. Quincy.
- Some lay in dead mens skulls; and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As twere in frown of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakep. R. III.
- With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the batter'd skull within the brains. Dryden.

SLA

2. To lose the power of cohesion.
The fire, in lime burnt, lies hid, so that it appears to be cold; but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
3. To abate.
Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames. Milton.
4. To languish; to fail; to flag. Ainsworth.
- To SLACK. v. a.
- To SLACKEN. v. a.
1. To loosen; to make less tight.
Ah generous youth, that with forbear;
Slack all thy fails, and fear to come. Dryden.
- Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd fails
Had still at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.- 2. To relax; to remit.
This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the finews like a bridle's reins,
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn or stop, as the them slacks or strains. Davies.

Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings. Pope.- 3. To ease; to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for slake.
Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint, which they were used unto, now slack'd, they grow more loose. Spenser.

If there be cure or charm
To respice or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton's Paradise Lost.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil. Philips.- 4. To remit for want of eagerness.
My guards
Are you, great pow'rs, and th' unabated strength

Ta'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace. Ben. Johnf.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course. Milt.- 5. To cause to be remitted.
You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still. Bacon.

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wife man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise. Milton.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the am'rous youth bestow'd the race. Waller.

One conduces to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way. Dryden.- 6. To relieve; to unbend.
Here have I seen the king, when great affairs Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares, Attended to the chafe by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour. Denham.

To with-hold; to use less liberally.
He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakep.- 8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.
Some unslack'd lime cover with ashes, and let it stand 'till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together. Mort.

That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

SLACKNESS.

SLA

SLACKNESS. n. f. [from slack.]

1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.

It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted.

These thy offices,

So rarely kind, are as interpreters

Of my behind-hand slackness.From man's effeminate slackness it begins,

Who should better hold his place

By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Want of tendency.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected.

4. Weakness; not force; not intenceness.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy.SLAG. n. f. The dross or recrement of metal.

1. To quench; to extinguish.

He did always strive Himself with selves to health for to restore,

And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore. Fa. Queen.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,

And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,

It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. *Shakep. H.VI.*His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart. Crashaw.

A lambent flame arose, which gently spread

Around his brows, and on his temples fed:

Amaz'd, with running water we prepare

To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair. Dryden.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches slake,

And with the crystal stream their thirst at pleasure slake.

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase;

Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. *Addis. Cats.*2. It is used of lime, so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime, and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it.

To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.] To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If the the body's nature did partake,

Her strength would with the body's strength decay;

But when the body's strongest finews slake,

Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay. *Davies.*To SLAM. v. a. [Slama, Islandick; schlagen, Dutch.] To slaughter; to crush. A word not used but in low conversation.To SLANDER. v. a. [esclaudrie, French; scandalum, Latin.] To censure falsely; to belie.

Slander Valentine

With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent. *Shakep. Lear.*He hath slandered thy servant unto the king. 2 Sa. xix. 27.

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slander- ing it.

Thou do'st with lies the throne invade,

By practice harden'd in thy slanderous trade;

Obtending heav'n for what'er ills befall,

And putt'ring under specious names thy gall. Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,

But cares not if a thousand are undone. *Dryden.*SLANDER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;

When cut-purses come not to throngs. Shak. K. Lear.

Since that, we hear he is in arms,

We think not so;

Yet charge the consul with our harms,

That let him go:

So in our censure of the state

We still do wander,

And make the careful magistrate

The mark of slander. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

2. Disgrace; reproach.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!

Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakep. R. III.

3. Disreputation; ill name.

You shall not find me, daughter,

After the slander of most step-mothers,

Ill-ey'd unto you. *Shakep. Lear.*SLANDERER. n. f. [from slander.] One who belies another;

one who lays false imputations on another.

In your servants suffer any offence against yourself rather than against God: endure not that they should be railers or slanders, tell-tales or sowers of dissension. *Taylor.*Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer. *Dryden.*SLANDEROUS. adj. [from slander.]

1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.

What king so strong

Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? Shakep. Lear.

To me belongs

The care to shun the blast of slanderous tongues:

Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,

Thus with vile censure taint my spotless name. Pope.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.

I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors, with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

We lay these honours on this man,

To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads. Shak. Jul. Cas.

As by flattery a man opens his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderous misreport he shuts the same to his best friends. *South.*SLANDEROUSLY. adv. [from slandereous.] Calumniously; with false reproach.

I may the better satisfy them who object these doubts, and slandereously bark at the courtes which are held against that trait-terous earl and his adherents. Spenser on Ireland.

They did slanderously object,

How that they durst not hazard to present hand open, or with something rather broad than sharp.

The laugh, the slap, the jocular curse go round. *Thomson.*SLAP. adv. [from the noun.] With a sudden and violent blow.

Peg's servants complained; and if they offered to come into the warehouse, then straight went the yard slap over their noddle. *Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.*To SLAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with a slap.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,

Here stroak'd his chin, and cock'd his hat;

Then slapp'd his hand upon the board,

And thus the youth put in his word. *Prior.*SLAPDASH. interj. [from slap and dash.] All at once: as any thing broad falls with a slap into the water, and dashes it about.

A low word.

And yet, slapdash, is all again

In ev'ry finew, nerve, and vein. *Prior.*To SLASH. v. a. [slasa, to strike, Islandick.]

1. To cut; to cut with long cuts.

2. To lash. Slash is improper.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to slash

The vigorous steeds that drew his lord's calash,

To Peggy's side inclin'd. *King.*To SLASH. v. n. To strike at random with a sword; to lay about him.

The knights with their bright burning blades

Broke their rude troops, and orders did confound,

Hewing and slashing at their idle shades. Fairy Queen.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,

Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook. *Pope.*SLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cut; wound.

Some few received some cuts and slashes that had drawn blood. Clovenston.

2. A cut in cloth.

What! this a sleeve?

Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slash and slash. Shakep. Lear.

Like to a censor in a barber's shop.

SLATERN. n. f. [slactti, Swedish.] A woman negligent, not elegant or nice.

Without the raising of which sum,

You dare not be so troublesome

To pinch the slatterns black and blue,

For leaving you their work to do. Hudibras.

We may always observe, that a gossip in politics is a flattern in her family. Addison's Freeholder.

The fallow skin is for the swarthy put,

And low can make a slattern of a slut. Dryden.

Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,

The new-found'd manteau and the slattern air. *Gay.*SLATY. adj. [from slate.] Having the nature of slate.

All the stone that is slaty, with a texture long, and parallel to the line of the stratum, will split only lengthways, or horizontally; and, if placed in any other position, 'tis apt to give way, start, and burst, when any considerable weight is laid upon it. *Woodward on Fossils.*SLAVE. n. f. [esclave, French.] It is said to have its originalfrom the Slavi, or Slavonians, subdued and sold by the Ve-

Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity

The slave of nature, and the son of hell. Shakep. R. III.

Of guests he makes them slaves

Inhospitably. Milton.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then

It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they being generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money. South.

Perspective a painter must not want; yet without subjecting ourselves to wholly to it, as to become slaves of it. Dryden.

To-morrow, should we thus express our friendship,

Each might receive a slave into his arms:

This fun perhaps, this morning sun's the last;

That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty. *Addison's Cato.*To SLAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To drudge; to toil; to toil.

Had women been the makers of our laws,

The men should slave at cards from morn to night. *Swift.*SLAVER. n. f. [salvato, Latin; slasa, Islandick.] Spittle running from the mouth; drivel.

Mathiolus hath a passage, that a toad communicates its venom not only by urine, but by the humidity and slaver of itsmouth, which will not consist with truth. Brown.

Of all mad creatures, if the leam'd are right,

It is the slaver kills, and not the bite. *Pope.*To SLAVER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be smeared with spittle.

Should I

Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs

That mount the capitol; join gripes with hands

Made hard with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakep.

2. To emit spittle.

Miso came with scowling eyes to deliver a *slaver*ing good-morrow to the two ladies. *Shakep.*Why must he putter, spawl, and slaver it,In vain, against the people's fav'rite? *Swift.*To SLAVER. v. a. To smear with drivel.

SLED. n. f. [slæd, Danish; slæde, Dutch.] A carriage drawn without wheels.
The sled, the tumbrel, hurdles, and the sail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

SLEDDER. adj. [from slæd.] Mounted on a sled.
So frown'd he once when in an angry parle,
He smote the sladder Polack on the ice. Shakespeare.

SLEDDER. n. f. [from slæd.] A large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force,
At once upon him ran, and him beset,
With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,
And on his shield like iron slades bet. Fairy Queen.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,
The hardest iron soon doth mollify,
That with his heavy slade he can it beat,
And fashion to what he it list apply. Spenser.

The uphand slade is used by under workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out: they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Mason.

Aristotle ascribes it unto the swiftness of that motion; but it would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy, than any foster and more gentle striking of a great slade. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a slæd. See SLED.

In Lancashire, they use a sort of slæde made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, drawn with one horse. Mort.

SLEEK. n. f. [slæch, Dutch.] Smooth; mild; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights. Shakespeare.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton
Y' appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin. Shakespeare.

Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rub'd, and trim'd,
More sleek'd, more soft, and slacker limb'd. Ben. Jonson.

What time the groves were clad in green,
The fields all drest in flowers,
And that the sleek-hair'd nymphs were seen,
To seek them summer bowers. Drayton.

The purest pasteboard, with a sleek stone rub smooth, and as even as you can. Peacham.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd
His turret crest, and sleek enamel'd neck, Fawning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek,
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp. Milton.

Thy head and hair are sleek,
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,
Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take
To see so fair a rival. Dryden.

To SLEEK. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.
By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,
And fair Ligea's golden comb,
Wherewith the fits on diamond rocks,
Sleeking her soft alluring locks. Milton.

2. To render soft, smooth, or glossy.
Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to night. Shakespeare.

With crumbs of bread and milk, and lies a-nights
In her neat gloves. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.

A sheet of well sleeked marble paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall.
The persuasive rhetoric
That sleek'd his tongue, and won so much on Eve, Milton.

So little here, nay loth,
A crulle of fragrance, form'd of burnish'd gold,
Odour divine! whose soft refreshing streams
Sleek the smooth skin, and feent the snowy limbs. Pope.

SLEEKLY. adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly; glossily.
Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, and their blue coats brush'd. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

To SLEEK. v. n. [slæpan, Gothic; slæpan, Saxon; slæpan, Dutch.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental powers.
I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle. Shakespeare.

SLEE

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleeps, hath thrice her prayers said, Shakespeare.

Rein up the organs of her fantasy;

But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and thine. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge. Shakespeare.

Sleep on now, and take your rest; behold, the hour is at hand. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

Peace, good reader! do not weep;
Peace! the lovers are asleep:
They, sweet turtles! folded lie,
In the last knot that love could tie. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

Let them sleep, let them sleep,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with that light. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

Whole day shall never sleep in night. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

Those who at any time sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it.

2. To rest; to be motionless.
Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly-bon'd clown in chimes of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove on my knees thou mayst be turned into hob-nails. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots amain,
Till counterbuff'd the stops, and sleeps again. Dryden.

3. To live thoughtlessly.
We sleep over our happiness, and want to be roused into a quick thankful sense of it. Atterbury.

4. To be dead; death being a state from which man will come time awake.
If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 1 Thess.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot raise from the grave; though he only sleeps unto God, who can raise from the chamber of death. Asyl's Paragon.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.
Heav'n will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have sleep'd upon This bold, bad man. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

6. To be unnoticed, or unattended.
You ever
Have with'd the sleeping of this business, never Deird' it to be stir'd. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

SLEEP. n. f. [from the verb.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental powers; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry sleep no more!
Macbeth doth murder sleep; the innocent sleep;
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care;
The birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Cold callest the spirits to succour; and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. And for the same cause, pain and noise hinder sleep; and darkness furthereth sleep. Bacon.

Beasts that sleep in winter, as wild bears, during their sleep wax very fat, though they eat nothing.

His fasten'd hands the rudder keep,
And fix'd on heav'n, his eyes reel invading sleep. Dryden.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
His hat adorn'd with wings diabol'd the gods,
And in his hand the sleep compelling rod. Dryden.

Infants spend the greatest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

SLEEPER. n. f. [from sleep.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.
Sound music; come my queen, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shakespeare.

What's the business,
That such an hideous trumpet calls to parley with the sleepers of the house? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon; the inhabitants say is a plant that sleeps. There be sleepers now then; for almost all flowers do the like. Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a spy taken, and a sleeping slain. Dryden.

He must be no great eater, drinker, nor sleepers, that will discipline his senses, and exert his mind's every worthy undertaking requires both. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

SLE

4. A lazy inactive drone.

3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

3. Let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if grown unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution. Bacon.

4. A fish. Ansforth.

SLEEPY. adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

2. Dully; lazily.

3. I rather chide to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings. Raleigh.

3. Stupidly.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before. Atterbury.

SLEEPINESS. n. f. [from sleepy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleepiness, and is the most ill boding symptom of a fever. Arbutnot.

SLEEPLESS. adj. [from sleep.] Wanting sleep.

The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd,
Though after sleepless night. Milton's Paradise Lost.

While penive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep. Pope.

SLEEPY. adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; disposed to sleep.

2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there. Go, carry them and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

And rising hally, took a short adieu. Dryden.

3. Somniferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not fill. Milton.

I sleeped about eight hours, and no wonder; for the physicians had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine. Gulliver.

SLEET. n. f. [perhaps from the Danish, slæt.] A kind of smooth small hail or snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hasting up behind,
Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleet,
And hear their thunder rattling in the wind. Dryden.

Perpetual sleet and driving snow
Obscure the skies, and hang on herds below.
Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wintry walls
Of snow congeal'd. Dryden.

Rains would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleet, then snow, and ice, and frost. Cheyne.

To SLEET. v. n. [from the noun.] To snow in small particles, intermixed with rain.

SLEET. v. a. [from the noun.] Bringing sleet.

SLEEVE. n. f. [from the noun.] A garment that covers the arms.

1. The part of a garment that covers the arms.
Once my well-waiting eyes esp'd my treasure,
With sleeve turn'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged,
Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure. Sidney.

The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish; and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion: for in armory, the fashion of the Manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms; for Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Asteth in a tourney. Spenser's Ireland.

Your hose should be ungarter'd, your sleeve unbutton'd, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakespeare.

You would think a smock a she-angel, he so chants to the sleeve-band, and the work about the square on't. Shakespeare.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a cape. Bacon.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. Sleeve, in some provinces, signifies a knot or skein of silk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLEAVE.]

Methought I heard a voice cry, sleep no more!
Macbeth doth murder sleep; the innocent sleep;
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care;
The birth of each day's life. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Sleeve, Dutch, signifies a cover; any thing spread over; which seems to be the sense of sleeve in the proverbial phrase. A brace of sharpers laugh at the whole roguesy in their sleeves. L'Estrange.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. Dryden.

4. To hang on a sleeve; to make dependent.

It is not for a man which doth know, or should know what orders, and what peaceable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgment upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine. Hooker.

5. [Lallig, Latin.] A fish. Ansforth.

SLEEVED. adj. [from sleeve.] Having sleeves.

SLEEVELESS. adj. [from sleeve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.
His cloaths were strange, though coarse, and black, tho' bare;
Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet, but 'twas now, so much ground was seen, Become tufflaffaty. Donne.

They put on long sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton. Samys.

Behold you idle by palmers, pilgrims trod,
Grave mummers! sleeveless come, and shirtheless others. Pope.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long possessed, I know not well how it obtained; Skinner thinks it properly liveless or lifeless: to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from sleeve, a knot, or skain, and so signify unconnected, hanging ill together? or from sleeve, a cover; and therefore means plainly asid; foolish without palliation?] Hooker.

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multipreference. Hall.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it. Spektator.

SLEIGHT. n. f. [slægt, cunning, Islandick.] Artful trick; cunning artifice; dexterous practice; as sleight of hand; the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, sleight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolite; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning sleights. Hooker.

Fair Una to the red cross knight
Betrothed is with joy;
Though false Duella it to bar,
Her false sleights do employ. Fairy Queen.

Upon the corner of the moon,
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that distill'd by magick sleights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Out slept the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him, Laertes' son,
That crafty one as huge in sleight. Chapman.

She could not so convey
The mally substance of that idol great,
What sleight had she the warden to betray?
What strength to heave the goddess from her seat? Fair.

In the wily snake
Whatever sleight, none would suspicious mark;
As from his wit, and native subtilty
Proceeding. Milton.

Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat;
As lookers on feel most delight,
That least perceive the juggler's sleight. Hudibras.

Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths. L'Estrange.

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us. Dryden.

While innocent he scorns ignoble sleight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight. Swift.

SLEINE. n. f. [This word is apparently misprinted for seine.] Is a net of about forty fathoms in length, with which they encompass a part of the sea, and draw the same on land by two ropes fastned at its ends, together with such fish as lighteth within his precinct. Carew.

SLENDER. adj. [slinder, Dutch.]

1. Thin; small in circumference compared with the length; not thick.
So thick the roses bushing round
About her glow'd; half-swooping to support
Each flow'r of slender stalk. Milton.

2. Small in the wat; having a fine shape.
What slender youth bedew'd with liquid odours,
Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave.
Beauteous Helen thines among the rest,
Tall, slender, straight, with all the graces blest. Dryden.

3. Not

SLI

3. Not bulky; slight; not strong.
Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains. Pope.
4. Small; inconsiderable; weak.
Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentence upon as many as refuse to embrace the same, must have special regard, that their first foundations and grounds be more than slender probabilities. Hooker.
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident. Shakespeare.
Positively to define that season, there is no slender difficulty. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It is a very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction, between things being troublesome, and being evils; when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us. Tilolson.
5. Sparing; less than enough: as, a slender estate and slender parts.
At my lodging,
The worst is this, that at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance. Shaksp.
In obstructions inflammatory, the aliment ought to be cool, slender, thin, diluting. Arbutnot.
6. Not amply supplied.
The good Ostorius often deign'd
To grace my slender table with his presence. Philips.
- SL'ENDERLY. adv. [from slender.]
1. Without bulk.
2. Slightly; meanly.
If the debt be not just, we know not what may be deemed just, neither is it a sum to be slenderly regarded. Hayward.
If I have done well, it is that which I desired; but if slen-derly and meanly, it is that which I could attain to. 2 Mac.
- SL'ENDERNES. n. f. [from slender.]
1. Thinness; smallness of circumference.
Small whistles give a sound because of their extreme slen-derness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe.
Their colours arise from the thinness of the transparent parts of the feathers; that is from the slenderness of the very fine hairs or capillamenta, which grow out of the sides of the groffer lateral branches or fibres of those feathers. Newton.
2. Want of bulk or strength.
It is preceded by a spitting of blood, occasioned by its acrimony, and too great a projectile motion, with slenderness

slippery is their standing, and the deeper the fall. L'Estrange.
The highest hill is the most slippery place,
And fortune mocks us with a smiling face. Denham.
Beauty, like ice, our footing does betray;
Who can tread sure on the smooth slippery way? Dryden.
3. Hard to hold; hard to keep.
Thus surely bound, yet be not overbold,
The slippery god will try to loose his hold;
And various forms assume, to cheat thy sight,
And with vain images of beasts affright. Dryden's Georg.
4. Not standing firm.
When they fall, as being slippery flanders,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Doth one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida.
5. Uncertain; changeable; mutable; instable.
Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise,
Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.
He looking down
With scorn or pity on the slippery state
Of kings, will tread upon the neck of fate. Denb. Sophy.
6. Not certain in its effect.

A liberty might be left to the judges to inflict death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks. Temple.
If a tinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.
He took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.
SLIT. n. s. [Jlitan, Saxon.] A long cut, or narrow opening.
In St James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineath a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and to insure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble sloughs, and appear fresh. Shak. Twelfth Night.

 When the mind is quicken'd,
 The organs, though defunct and dead before,
 Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
 With cast sloughs and fresh legerity. Shaksp. King Lear.
 As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
 With shining checker'd sloughs, doth sting a child,
 That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shak. Hen. VI.
 Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
 In open plains, or in the secret shade,
 When he, renew'd in all the speckl'd pride
 Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside;
 And in his Summer liv'ry rolls along,
 Erect and brandishing his forked tongue. Dryden.
 The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticula, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall: the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours. Grew.

 mercies will I gather thee. J. liv. 7.
 Death only this mysterious truth unfolds,
 The mighty soul how small a body holds. Dryden's Juven.
 All numberless is but still the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole together a distinct name, whereby to distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Lee.
 The ordinary *small*est measure we have is looked on as an unit in number. Locke.
 The danger is less when the quantity of the fluids is too small, than when it is too great; for a smaller quantity will pass where a larger cannot, but not contrariwise. Ambroset.
 Good cooks cannot abide fiddling work: such is the creasing of small birds, requiring a world of cookery. Saunders.
 2. Slender; exile; minute.
 After the earthquake a fire, and after the fire a fill small

To SNA'RL. v. n. [snarrem, Dutch.]

1. To growl as an angry animal; to gnarl.

What! were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me? Shakespeare. R. III.

5. [Snapper,

SNA

He is born with teeth!

And so I was; which plainly signify'd
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog. Shak. H. VI.

The she's even of the savage herd are safe:
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return
But courtship from the male. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Now, for the bare pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarls in the gentle eyes of peace. Shakespeare. K. John.

An angry cur
Snarls while he feeds. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

2. To speak roughly; to talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little lapses of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted. Dryden.

The honest farmer and his wife,
Two years declin'd from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage-noose,
As almost ev'ry couple does:
Sometimes my plague! sometimes my darling!
Kissing to-day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.

Where hast thou been snarling odious truths, and entertaining company with discourse of their diseases? Congreve.

To SNA'RL. v. a. To intangle; to embarrass. I know not that this sense is well authorized.

Confused snarled consciences render it difficult to pull out thread by thread. Decay of Piety.

SNA'RLER. n. f. [from snarl.] One who snarls; a growling, furly, quarrelsome, insulting fellow.

Should stupid libels grieve your mind,
You soon a remedy may find;
Lie down obscure, like other folks,
Below the lash of snarlers jokes. Swift.

SNA'RY. adj. [from snare.] Intangling; insidious.

Spiders in the vault their snary webs have spread. Dryden.
SNA'Y. n. f. The snuff of a candle.

It first burned fair, 'till some part of the candle was consumed, and the sawdust gathering about the snay; but then it made the snay big and long, and burn'd thickly, and the candle waited in half the time of the wax pure. Bacon's Nat. History.

To SNAATCH. v. a. [snacken, Dutch.]

1. To seize any thing hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth. Hooker.

Death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain. Milton.

Life's stream hurries all too fast:
In vain sedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take. Pope.

She snatch'd a sheet of Thule from her bed:
Sudden she flies, and whelms it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames. Pope's Dunciad.

They, sailing down the stream,
Are snatch'd immediately by the quick-ey'd trout
Of darting salmon. Thomson's Summer.

2. To transport or carry suddenly.

He had scarce performed any part of the office of a bishop in the diocese of London, when he was snatched from thence, and promoted to Canterbury. Clarendon.

Oh nature!
Enrich me with the knowledge of thy works,
Snatch me to heaven. Thomson's Autumn.

To SNAATCH. v. n. To bite, or catch eagerly at something.

Lords will not let me: if I had a monopoly on't, they would have part on't; nay, the ladies too will be snatching.
Shakespeare. King Lear.

He shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry. Jf. ix. 20.
Lycus, swifter of his feet,
Runs, doubles, winds and turns, amidst the war;
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden's Æn.

SNAATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A hasty catch.

2. A short fit of vigorous action.
After a shower to weeding a snatch;
More easily weed with the root to dispatch. Truffer.

3. A small part of anything; a broken part.

She chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being compens'd by snatches of time, as medical vacations would permit. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

4. A broken or interrupted action; a short fit.

The snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

They move by fits and snatches; so that it is not conceivable how they conduce unto a motion, which, by reason of its perpetuity, must be regular and equal. Wilkins's Dædalus.

We have often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year. Speccator.

5. A

SNE

5. A quip; a shuffling answer.
Come, leave your snatches, and yield me a direct answer.
Shakef. Measure for Measure.
- SNA'TCHER. n. f. [from snatch.] One that snatches, or takes any thing in haste.
They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend Our inland from the pilfering borderers.
—We do not mean the courting snatchers only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot. Shakef. H. V.
- SNA'TCHINGLY. adv. [from snatching.] Hastily; with interruption.
- To SNEAK. v. n. [from snack, Saxon; snige, Danish.]
1. To creep sily; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.
Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weazel, Scot,
Comes snaking, and so sucks her princely eggs. Shakespeare.
Snack not away, fir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon: lay hold on him. Shakespeare.
Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and snack'd away. Dryden.
I ought not to turn my back, and to snack off in silence, and leave the truth to lie baffled, bleeding, and slain. Watts.
He snack'd into the grave,
A monarch's half and half a harlot's slave. Dunciad.
Are you all ready? Here's your music here:
Author, snack off; we'll tickle you, my dear. Moore.
2. To behave with meanness and servility; to crouch; to truckle.
I need salute no great man's threshold, snack to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my conscience. South.
Nothing can support minds drooping and snaking, and inwardly reproaching them, from a sense of their own guilt, but to see others as bad. South's Sermons.
When int'rest calls off all her snaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last ling'ring friend has bid farewell. Pope.
Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will snack a fiery'ner, an exceeding knave. Pope.
- SNEAKER. n. f. A large vessel of drink.
I have just left the right worshipful and his myrmidons about a snacker of five gallons. Spectator.
- SNEAKING. participial adj. [from snack.]
1. Servile; mean; low.
2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parcimonious.
- SNEAKINGLY. adv. [from snaking.] Meanly; servilely.
Do all things like a man, not snakingly:
Think the king sees thee still. Herbert.
While you snakingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourag'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudibras.
- SNEAKUP. n. f. [from snack.] A cowardly, creeping, insidious scoundrel. Obsolete.
- The prince is a jack, a snackup; and, if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so. Shak. H. IV.
- To SNEAP. v. a. [This word seems a corruption of snit, or of snap, to reprimand. Perhaps snap is in that sense from snit, snibbe, Danish.]
Men should him snibbe bitterly. Chaucer.
1. To reprimand; to check.
2. To nip.
- What may
Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No snapping winds at home. Shakespeare.
- SNEAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.
My lord, I will not undergo this snearp without reply: you call honourable boldness impudent sauciness: if a man will court'ly and say nothing, he is virtuous. Shakef. Henry IV.
- To SNEB. v. a. [Properly to snib. See SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.
Which made this foolish briar wax so bold,
That on a time he cast him to scold,
And snibbe the good oak, for he was old. Spenser.
- To SNEER. v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snare and snort.]
1. To show contempt by looks: nasus suffundere aduere.
2. To insultate contempt by covert expressions.
The wolf was by, and the fox in a snearing way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. L'Estrange.
I could be content to be a little snear'd in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Pope.
If there has been any thing expell'd with too much feve-rity, it will fall upon those snearing or daring writers of the age against religion, who have left reason and decency. Watts.
3. To utter with grimace.
I have not been snearing fulsome lies, and nauseous flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve.
4. To show awkward mirth.
I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they snear'd at every word spoken by each other. Tatler.

SNI

- SNEER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.
Did not the snear of more impartial men
At sense and virtue, balance all agen. Pope.
2. An expression of ludicrous scorn.
Socrates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one nor the majesty of the other could secure them from a snear. Watts.
- To SNEEZE. v. n. [from sniezen, Saxon; niesen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly by the nose.
If one be about to snearze, rubbing the eyes 'till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes. Bacon.
If the pain be more intense and deeper within amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and no-strils, with frequent snearzing. Wise man's Surgery.
To thee Cupid snearz'd aloud;
And every lucky omen sent before,
To meet thee landing on the Spartan shore. Dryden.
If any thing oppres the head, it hath a power to free itself by snearzing. Ray on the Creation.
Violent snearzing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration: so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of snearzing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce head-ach, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbuthnot.
An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me snearze violently. Gulliver's Travels.
- SNEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.
I heard the rack
As earth and sky would mingle; but These flaws, though mortals fear them
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Are to the main as wholesome as a snearze
To man's less universe, and soon are gone. Milt. Par. Reg.
We read in Godignus, that upon a snearze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there past exclamations successively through the city. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- SNEEZEWORD. n. f. [from sniezen, Latin.] A plant.
It hath radiated flowers, whose disk consists of many florets;
but the borders are composed of half florets: the embryos are lodged in the flowercup, which is scaly, each of which becomes one slender seed. Miller.
- SNET. n. f. [Among hunters.] The fat of a deer. Di.
- SNEW. The old preterite of To snow. Di.
- To SNIB. v. a. [from snibbe, Danish. See SNEAP.] To check; to nip; to reprimand.
Asked for their past by every quip,
That list at will them to revile or snib. Hudibras's Tale.
- SNICK and SNEE. n. f. A combat with knives.
Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snee was in fashion, a boatswain with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men beat him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sticking in his side, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth. Wise man's Surgery.
- To SNICKER, or SNIGGER. v. n. To laugh sily, wantonly, or contemptuously; to laugh in one's sleeve. Di.
- To SNIFF. v. n. [from sniffa, Swedish.] To draw breath audibly up
the nose.
So then you look'd scornful, and sniff at the dean,
As, who should say, now am I skinny and lean? Swift.
- To SNIFFLE. v. n.
Sniffing is thus performed: in a warm day, when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait leisurely, and as far as you may conveniently: if within the fight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees. Watson's Angler.
- To SNIP. v. a. [from snippen, Dutch.] To cut at once with scissors.
The sinus should be laid open, which was snit up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissors, and the incised lips dressed. Wise man's Surgery.
When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, fir Roger used to bargain to cut off a quarter of a yard: he wore a pair of scissors for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbuthnot.
Putting one blade of the scissors up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Stap.
- SNIP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A single cut with scissors.
What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and snip, and cut, and snip and snip,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.
The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open;
therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Watts.
2. A small thread.
Those we keep within compass by small snips of emphat.
hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wise man's Surgery.

SNO

3. A share; a snack. A low word.
He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend. L'Estrange.
- SNIFE. n. f. [from sniepe, German; snitze, Saxon; snit, Welsh.]
1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.
The external evident causes of the atra bilis are a high fermenting diet; as old cheese, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and swans. Floyer.
2. A fool; a blockhead.
Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. Shakef. Othello.
- SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] One that snips.
- SNIPPET. n. f. [from snip.] A small part; a share.
Witches simpling, and on gibbets
Cutting from malefactors snippets;
Or from the pill'ry tips of ears. Hudibras.
- SNIPSNAP. n. f. [A cant word formed by reduplication of snip.]
Tart dialogue.
Dennis and dissonance, and captious art,
And snipsnap short, and interruption smart. Pope's Dunciad.
- SNITE. n. f. [from snite, Saxon.] A snipe. This is perhaps the true name; but snipe prevails.
Of tame birds Cornwal hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood-dove. Carew.
- To SNITE. v. a. [from snite, Saxon.] To blow the nose.
Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to snearze;
in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Grew's Ceph.
- SNIVEL. n. f. [from snivel, German.] Snot; the running of the nose.
To SNIVEL. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To run at the nose.
2. To cry as children.
Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks; and whether we go to our graves sniveling or singing, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange.
Away goes he sniveling and yelping, that he had dropt his ax into the water. L'Estrange.
- SNIVELLER. n. f. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamenter.
He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.
- To SNORE. v. n. [from snorcken, Dutch.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.
I did unreasonably blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. B. Johnf.
Whose railing heroes, and whose wounded gods,
Makes some suspect he snores as well as nods. Rowe's Comin.
He may lie quietly in his shades, and snore on to doomday for me; unless I see farther reason of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.
- Is not yonder Proteus' cave?
It is; and in it lies the god asleep;
And snoring by
We may decry
The monsters of the deep. Dryden's Albion.
- 'Twas Acme's and Septimius' life;
The lady sigh'd, the lover snor'd. Prior.
- The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddl'd gore confus'd. Addison.
- SNORE. n. f. [from snorja, Saxon; from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.
The surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I've drugg'd their poskets.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- To SNORT. v. n. [from snorcken, Dutch.] To blow through the nose as a high metled horse.
The snoring of his horses was heard. Jer. viii. 16.
The fiery war-horse paws the ground,
And snorts and trembles at the trumpet's sound. Addison.
From their full racks the gen'rous steeds retire, Dropping ambrosial foams and snorting fire. Addison's Ovid.
He with wide nostrils, snorting, skirts the wave. Thomson.
- SNOT. n. f. [from snote, Saxon; snut, Dutch.] The mucus of
the nose.
Thus, when a greedy sloven once has thrown His snut into the mews, 'tis all his own. Swift.
- SNOUT. n. f. [from snout, Dutch.]
1. The nose of a beast.
His nose in the air, his snout in the skies.
In shape a beagle's whelp throughout,
With broader forehead, and a sharper snout. Dryden.

SNU

2. The nose of a man, in contempt.
Her subtle snout
Did quickly wind his meaning out. Hudibras.
But when the date of Nock was out,
Off dropt the sympathetick snout. Hudibras.
What Ethiop lips he has,
How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryd. Juven.
Charm'd with his eyes, and chin, and snout,
Her pocket-glass drew sily out;
And grew enamour'd with her phiz,
As just the counterpart of his. Swift.
1. The nosel or end of any hollow pipe.
SNOUTED. adj. [from snout.] Having a snout.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.
- SNOW. n. f. [from snaw, Saxon; snie, Dutch.] The small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops. Locke.
Benaiah slew a lion in a pit, in time of snaw. 2 Sa. xxiii.
Drought and heat consume snaw waters. Job xxiv. 19.
He gives the Winter's snaw her airy birth,
And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth. Sandys.
- To SNOW. v. n. [from snapan, Saxon; snieuwen, Dutch.] To have snow fall.
- To SNOW. v. a. To scatter like snow.
If thou be't born to see strange sights,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,
'Till age snaw white hairs on thee. Donne.
- SNOWBALL. n. f. [from snaw and ball.] A round lump of con-gelated snow.
They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snawball in rolling. Hayward.
His bulky folly gathers as it goes,
And, rolling o'er you, like a snawball grows. Dryden.
A snawball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snaw- balls, I call qualities; and as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas. Locke.
- SNOWBROTH. n. f. [from snaw and broth.] Very cold liquor.
Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snawbroth, one who never feels
The wanton flings and motions of the sense. Shakespeare.
- SNOWDROP. n. f. [from snaw and drop, Latin.] An early flower.
The flower is, for the most part, composed of six leaves, in form of a lily, which are sometimes equal, and sometimes unequal and pendulous: the empalement becomes a roundish fruit, which is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds: to which may be added, it hath a bulbous root. Miller.
When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of Winter, called snawdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle on Colours.
- The little shape, by magick pow'r,
Crew less and less, contracted to a flow'r;
A flow'r, that first in this sweet garden smil'd,
To virgins sacred, and the snawdrop styl'd. Tickell.
- SNOW-WHITE. adj. [from snaw and white.] White as snow.
A snaw-white bull shall on your shore be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main. Dryden's Æn.
- SNOWY. adj. [from snaw.]
1. White like snow.
So shews a snawy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shews. Shakespeare.
Now I see thy jolly train:
Snawy headed Winter leads,
Spring and Summer next succeeds;
Yellow Autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year.
The blushing ruby on her snawy breast,
Render'd its panting whiteness more confest. Prior.
2. Abounding with snow.
These first in Crete
And Ida known; thence on the snawy top Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air. Milton's Par. Lost.
As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
By Afracan, over the snawy plains,
Retires. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- SNUB. n. f. [from snubbe, Dutch, a nose, or knube, a joint of the finger.] A jag; a snag; a knot in wood.
Lifting up his dreadful club on high,
All arm'd with ragged snubs and knotty grain,
Him thought at first encounter to have slain. Fairy Queen.
- To SNUB. v. a. [Rather To snib. See SNEAP, SNEB, SNIB.]
1. To check; to reprimand.
2. To nip.
Near the seashores the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; but toward the sea are so snubbed by the winds, as if their boughs had been pared or thaven off. Ray.
- To SNUB. v. n. [from snuffen, Dutch.] To sob with convulsion.
To SNUDGE. v. n. [from snuger, Danish.] To lie idle, close, or snug.

Now

SNU

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And snuff in quiet; now he scorns increase;
Now all day spares. Herbert.

SNUFF. n. f. [snuff, Dutch, snoot.]
1. Snot. In this sense it is not used.
2. The useless excrement of a candle: whence moucher la chandelle.

My great affliction,
If I could bear longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your opposite wills,
My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out. Shakespeare. King Lear.
But dearest heart, and dearer image, flay!
Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:
Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;
For even at first life's taper is a snuff. Donne.
The snuff-dishes shall be of pure gold. Ex. xxv. 38.
If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks. Wilk.

3. A candle almost burnt out.
Lamentable!
To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
P' th' dungeon by a snuff. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.
A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped into the vapour. Addison on Italy.
5. Repentment expressed by snuffing; perverse repentment.

What hath been seen
Either in snuff or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rein which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again. L'Estrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct to ev'ry atom just
The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope.

TO SNUFF. v. a. [snuffen, Dutch.]
1. To draw in with the breath.
A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air against rain. Bacon.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite;
But when he stands collected in his might,
He roars and promises a more successful fight. Dryden.

The youth,
Who holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leans just forward on a shining spear. Dryden's Æn.
My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert. Addison.
My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brack-denstown, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in. Swift.

2. To scent.
The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind. Dryden.
For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves. Dryden.
O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms reject with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn:
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the fly felon through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues. Tickell.

3. To crop the candle.
The late queen's gentlewoman!
To be her mistress' mistress!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it,
And out it goes. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Against a communion-day our lamps should be better dressed, and our lights snuffed, and our religion more active.
Taylor's worthy Communicant.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire. Swift.
TO SNUFF. v. n.
1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.
The fury fires the pack, they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden.

SO

Says Hompus, sir, my master bad me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day:
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes. King.

2. To snift in contempt.
Ye said, what a weariness is it, and ye have snuff'd at it.
Mal. ii. 13.

SNUFFBOX. n. f. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.
If a gentleman leaves a snuffbox on the table, and goeth away, lock it up as part of your vails. Swift.
Sir Plume, of amber snuffbox justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane. Pope.

SNUFFERS. n. f. [from snuff.] The instrument with which the candle is clipped.
When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuffers open.
Swift's Directions to the Butler.

TO SNUFFLE. v. n. [snufflen, Dutch.] To speak through the nose; to breath hard through the nose.
A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffling grace, disdainful that his smelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could cspy the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air in pockets flut,
Sound filthier than from the gut. Hudibras.
It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who smelt and snuffed, and considered on't. L'Estrange.

One clad in purple,
Eats and recites some lamentable rhyme;
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffing at noise, and croaking in his throat. Dryden.

TO SNUG. v. n. [snuger, Dutch.] To lie close; to snudge.
There snugging well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amiss, fo to be fient. Sidney.
As the loving couple lay snugging together, Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber. L'Estrange.

SNUG. adj. [from the verb.]
1. Close; free from any inconvenience.
They spy'd a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind. Prior.

2. Close; out of notice.
At Will's
Lie snug, and hear what critics say. Swift.

3. Silly or insidiously close.
Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat? Dryden.

TO SNUGGLE. v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.
So. adv. [snug, Saxon; snug, Dutch; snug, German.]
1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.
As whom the fables feign of monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn that war'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay. Milton.

2. Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks
In Valambrosa, where th' Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embow'n, so thick bestrewn Abject and lost lay these. Milton.

Tir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky. Pope.
As into air the purer spirits flow,
And separate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her soul to its congenial place. Pope.

2. To such a degree.
Why is his chariot so long in coming?
Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, but its own weight
Will ruin it? Or is't blind chance That still defies new states t' advance. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

Amoret, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie;
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye?
I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed. Dryden.
Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are. Addison's Spectator.

We think our fathers fools, so wife we're grown:
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

SO

3. In such a manner.
4. It is regularly answered by as or that, but they are sometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell Grew darker at their frown. Milton.
There's no such thing, as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all;
For though some long ago

Lik'd certain colours mingl'd so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.
There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our soil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so. Locke.

I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice. Locke.
This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in Sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependent. Addison.

5. In the same manner.
Of such examples add me to the roll;
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not so. Milton.

To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too. Locke.
According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.
Not far from thence the mournful fields appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there. Dryden.
Does this deserve to be rewarded so?

Did you come here a stranger or a foe?
It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to enquire into those matters whether they be so or not. Tillotson.
No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers; they understand better than so, how to value those inestimable gifts of nature. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain. Pope.
Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution, by some more unaccountable way, this is certain that so it is. Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.
The gods, though loth, yet was constrain'd to obey;
For longer time than that, no living wight,
Below the earth, might suffer'd to be stay:
So back again him brought to living light. Fairy Queen.

If he fet industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him, and so all that he hath to do is to endeavour by prayer and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;
And so from heav'n to deepest hell. Milton's Paradise Lost.
God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion. Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition: answered by an.
O goddessa! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray,
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness:
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten;
As here I part without an angry thought.
So may kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field. Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that; such.
Be not sad:
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unprov'd, and leave
No spot or blame behind. Milton's Paradise Lost.
So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked. Atterbury.

Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;
So thou, my dearest, truest, best Alicia,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there; I will give up mankind. Rowe.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another, answering to as.
As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it. Swift.

SOA

11. It sometimes answers to the word or sentence going before, and returns the sense.

Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know. Denham.
Angling is something like poetry, men are to be born so.
Walton's Angler.

One may as well say, that the conflagration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so.
However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair;
For having once been guilty, well they know
To a revengful prince they still are so. Dryden.

He was great ere fortune made him so.
I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher; then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens. Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in that noble language peculiar to that great poet. Addison.
Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so. Swift.

As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so. Pope.

The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.
How sorrow shakes him!
So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.
When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,
And on it laid a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you. Shakespeare.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning. Well.
O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? who was your speaker.
Madam? Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

15. It sometimes is little more than an expletive, though it implies some latent or furd comparison.
An affringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary. Arbutnot.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.
There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so;
if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shakespeare.
I will never bear a base mind: if it be my destiny, so: if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince. Shak.

17. A form of petition.
Ready are th' appellants and defendants,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shakespeare.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.
So much as you admire the beauty of his verse, his prose is full as good. Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after some thing done or known.
I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So so. Shakespeare's Othello.
So so; it works: now mistress, fit you fast. Dryden.

20. So so. [sofi sofi, Italian.] Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.
He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so so: and yet 'tis well. Shakespeare.

Deliver us from the nauseous repetition of As and So, which some so so writers, I may call them so, are continually founding in our ears. Felton on the Clafficks.

21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.
So then the Volcians stand; but as at first Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon's again. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs: so then, I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound variety of designs.
Bacon's War with Spain.

TO SOAK. v. n. [soacan, Saxon.]
1. To lie steeped in moisture.
For thy conceit in soaking will draw in More than the common blocks. Shakespeare.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.
Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow vessel, putting a canvass between, and pour water upon it, so as to soak through: it will make a harder ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve than ordinarily. Bacon.

Rain soaking into the strata, which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.
3. To drink gluttonously and intemperately. This is a low term.
Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health and plenty; the least of which he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club. Locke.

SOB

To SOAK. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes

Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;

So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs

In blood of princes.

Their land shall be soaked with blood.There deep Galeus soaks the yellow sands.

Thou whose life's a dream of lazy pleasure:

'Tis all thy bus'ness, bus'ness how to thum

To bask thy naked body in the sun;

Suppling thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;

Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,

To suck the moisture up and soak it in.Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in,

prevents the birds eating it.

2. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them.

A greater sparer than a faver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garisons, and his feastings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer.

SOAP. n. f. [sapo, Saxon; sapo, Latin.] A substance used in washing, made of a luvium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil; its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving;

and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap.He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers soap.

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours.

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna.

Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap-boilers have done with them, for cold or four lands.

As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-lee or soap-suds adds thereto.SOAPBOILER. n. f. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is tomake soap.

A soapboiler condescends with me on the duties on cattle-soap.

SOAPWORT. n. f. Is a species of campion.To SOAR. v. n. [forare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings.

Feather'd foon and fledg'd,

They summ'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime,

With clang despis'd the ground.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

'Tis but a base ignoble mind

That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.How high a pitch his resolution soars.Valour soars above

What the world calls misfortune and afflictions.

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low

As high he soar'd.Flames rise and sink by fits; at last they soar

In one bright blaze, and then descend no more.

When swallows fleetly soar high, and sport in air,

He told us that the welkin would be clear.

SOAR. n. f. [from the verb.] Towering flight.Within soar

Of tow'ring eagles, to all the fowls he seems

A phoenix.

To SOB. v. n. [reob, geab, complaining, Saxon. Perhaps it isa mere onomatopoeia c'pied from the sound.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,

Told the sad story of my father's death,

He twenty times made pause to sob and weep.

As if her life and death lay on his saying,

Some tears she shed, with sighs and *sob*ings mixt;

As if her hopes were dead through his delaying.

She sigh'd, the sob'd, and furious with despair,

She rent her garments, and she tore her hair.

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it.

He sobbing fees

The glades, mid-opening to the golden day.

SOB. n. f. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break heart, or chink with sobs my hated breath;

Do thy own work, admit no foreign death.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,

The short thick sobs, loud screams, and shriller squall.

A word'rous bag with both her hands she binds:

There she collects the force of female lungs,

Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.To SOB. v. a. To sob. A cant word.The tree being sobbed and wet, swells.SOBER. adj. [sebrus, Latin; sobre, French.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

Live a sober, righteous, and godly life.The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man.

No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author; that he which being overcome with drink did then strike any man, should suffer punishment double, as much as if he had done the same being sober.

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raging mad; there was not a sober person to be had; all was tempestuous and blustering.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

This same young sober-blooded boy a man cannot make him laugh.

Cicero travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writ-ter.

Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded.

The governor of Scotland being of great courage, and sober judgment, amply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field.

These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives

Religious, titled them the sons of God,

Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame

Ignobly to the trains and to the smiles

Of these fair atheists.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.

Petruchio shall

Offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,

To old Baptista as a schoolmaster.

Come, civil night,

Thou sober-suited matron, all in black.

Twilight grey

Had in her sober liv'ry all things clad.What parts gay France from sober Spain,

A little rising rocky chain:

Of men born south or north th' hill,

Those seldom move; these ne'er stand still.

Swift and he despis'd the force of state,

The sober follies of the wife and great.See her sober over a fampler, or gay over a jointed baby.To SOBER. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make sober.

A little learning is a dang'rous thing;

Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;

There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,

And drinking largely sobers us again.SOBERLY. adv. [from sober.]

1. Without intemperance.

2. Without madness.

3. Temperately; moderately.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers.

4. Coolly; calmly.

Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly laying on the blows slowly.SOBERNESS. n. f. [from sober.]

1. Temperance in drink.

Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm; coolness.

rations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well.

The soberness of Virgil might have shewn him the difference.SOBERETY. n. f. [from sebrus, French; sebrus, Latin.]

1. Temperance in drink; sobriety.

Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in scripture is more declaimed against than gluttony; and soberety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister, more than that he which

which describeth the manner how to pitch a field, should speak of moderation and sobriety in diet.

Freedom from inordinate passion.

The libertine could not prevail on men of virtue and so- briety to give up their religion.

5. Calmness; coolness.

We will enquire with all sobriety and severity, whether there be in the footsteps of nature, any such transmigration of immaterial virtues and what the force of imagination is.

Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth; but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and stupid old infancy?

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the steadiness and sobriety of age be wanting.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

Mirth makes them not mad;

Nor sobriety sad.SOCCAGE. n. f. [soc, French, a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous

Latin.] In law, is a tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee.

All services due for land being knight's service, or soccage;so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This *soc-*cage is of three kinds; a soccage of free tenure, where a man

holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Soccage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Soccage of base tenure is wherethose that hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt, and such socmen hold not by certain service.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service.

SOCIAL. adj. [socialis, French; sociabilis, Latin.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them as they are social parts united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild, and social to man;

To cultivate the wild licentious savage

With wisdom, discipline.

A pump grown dry will yield no water; but pouring a little into it first, for one bafon full you may fetch up as many soe-fills. Mora.

Soe'VER. adv. [so and ever.] A word properly joined with a pronoun or adverb, as whosoever; whatsoever; howsoever.

What great thing soe'ver a man proposed to do in his life, he should think of achieving it by fifty. Temple.

What love soe'ver by an heir is shown,
Or you could ne'er suspect my loyal love. Dryden.

So'FA. n. f. [I believe an eastern word.] A splendid seat covered with carpets.

The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat, and cried out, 'tis my Abdallah! Guardian.

SoFT. adj. [softe, Saxon; soft, Dutch.]

1. Not hard.

Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitutions of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch. Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the jejuneness of the spirits, which if a greater degree, make them not only hard, but fragile. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings houses. Matth.

3. Ductile; not either too stiff; soft.

Spirits can neither be too stiff; soft.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.

A few divines of soft and fervile tempers as disposed them to soft fudden acting and compliance. K. Charles.

One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Estrange.

5. Tender; timorous.

What he hath done famously, he did it to that end; tho' soft condescended men can be content to say, it was for his country. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft ey'd virgin steal a tear. Pope.

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.

Would my heart were flint like Edward's;
Or Edward's soft and pitiful like mine. Shakespeare.

Our torments may become as soft as now severe. Milton.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay,
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.

7. Meek; civil; complaisant.

Say,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou do'st confess
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim
In asking their good loves. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

8. Placid; still; easy.

On her soft axle while she paces even,
She bears thee soft with the smooth air along. Milton.

There soft-extended, to the murmuring sound
Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.

9. Effeminate; viciously nice.

This fence is also mistress of an art
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;
Though this dear art doth little good impart,
Since they smell best, that do of nothing smell. Davies.

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Notes on the Odyssey.

SOF

10. Delicacy; elegantly tender.

Her form more soft and feminine. Milton.

Let's winning soft, let's amiably mild. Milton.

11. Weak; simple.

The deceiver soon found this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him. Glauville.

12. Gentle; not loud; not rough.

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle and low, an excellent thing in women. Shakespeare.

The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders. Milton.

When some great and gracious monarch dies,
Soft whispers first, and mournful murmurs rise
Among the sad attendants; then the found Soon gathers voice. Dryden.

Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,
His head reclin'd, young Ithacus begun. Pope.

13. Smooth; flowing.

The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays. Milton.

Soft were my numbers, who could take offence,
When smooth description held the place of fable. Pope.

Hark, the numbers soft and clear
Gently steal upon the ear. Pope.

14. Not forcible; not violent.

Sleep falls with soft slumb'rous weight. Milton.

SoFT. interj. Hold; stop; not to fast.

But soft, I pray you; did King Richard then Proclaim my brother. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shakespeare.

But soft, my muse, the world is wide,
And all at once was not decry'd. Suckling.

To SoFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]

1. To make soft; to make less hard.

Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate. Bacon's Natural History.

Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,
And founding hammers break its barbed frame. Gay.

2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.

I will soften stony hearts.

Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them, or soften them by their representation. Audjén.

I would correct the harsh expressions of one party by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire,
Bid her be all that cheers or softens life;
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;
Musick can soften pain to ease,
And make despair and madness please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh.

He bore his great commission in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryd.

To SoFTEN. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.

Many bodies, that will hardly melt, will soften; as iron in the forge. Bacon's Natural History.

2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child;
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails. Shakespeare.

SoFTLY. adv. [from soft.]

1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently; not forcibly.

Solid bodies, if very sofly percussed, give no sound; as when a man treadeth very sofly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.

Ahab rent his cloaths, and went sofly. 1 Kings xxi. 27.

In this dark silence sofly leave the town,
And to the general's tent direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.

Death will dismiss me,
And lay me sofly in my native dust,
To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust.
She with a wreath of myrtle crowns the head,
And sofly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden's Æmid.

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die;
Though pity sofly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

SoFTNER. n. f. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.

Those softners, and expedient-mongers, shake their heads
So strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

SoFTNESS. n. f. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft.

2. Quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold. Bacon's Natural History.

SOI

3. Mildness; kindness.

A wife man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness; or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Watts's Logick.

4. Civility; gentleness.

Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

5. Effeminacy; vicious delicacy.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor.

He was not delighted with the softness of the court. Clarend.

6. Timorousness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon's Henry VII.

Saving a man's self, or suffering, if with reason, is virtue: if without it, is softness, or obliquity. Grew.

7. Quality contrary to hardness.

Softness of sounds is distinct from the exility of sounds. Bac.

8. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be affected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit, which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they whose words were even as oracles amongst men, seem'd evermore loth to give sentence against any thing publicly received in the church of God. Hooker.

9. Mildness; meekness.

For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness the and sweet attractive grace. Milton.

Her stubborn look

This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

SOHO. interj. A form of calling from a distant place.

To SOIL. v. a. [soil, Saxon; soelen, old German; soiller, French.]

1. To soil; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to fully.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And soiled with dust of the long dried way. Fairy Queen.

Although some heretics have abused this text, yet the sun is not soiled in passage. Bacon's Holy War.

If I soil

Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,
With the rank vapours of this in-worm mould. Milton.

Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

One who cou'd n't for a taste o' th' flesh come in,
Licks the soil'd earth,

While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood. Tate.

If the eye-glass be tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible, and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point. Newton.

An absent hero's bed they fought to soil,
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil. Pope.

2. To dung; to manure.

Men now present, just as they soil their ground, not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

SOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it late upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

That would be a great soil in the new glofs of your marriage. Shakespeare.

Vexed I am with passions,
Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour. Shakespeare.

I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wip'd off. Shakespeare.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
Which, nice as crimes, will not bear a soil. Dryden.

2. [Soil, French; soilum, Latin.] Ground; earth, considered with relation to its vegetative qualities.

Judgment may be made of waters by the soil whereupon they run. Bacon's Natural History.

Her spots thou see'st
As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruits in her soften'd soil. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The first cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the soil, to produce the necessities and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Swift.

3. Land; country.

Dorset, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance shall call home. Shakespeare.

To high promotions,
O unexpected stroke, worse than of death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise! thus leave Thee, native soil! these happy walks and shades;
Fit haunts of gods. Milton.

4. Dung; compost.

The haven has been stopp'd up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it; for all the soil on that side of Ravenna has been left there intentially by the sea. Addis.

Improve land by manure, dung, and other sort of soils. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SO'LINESS. n. f. [from soil.] Stain; foulness.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin, whether it yield no soiliness more than silver. Bacon.

SO'LURE. n. f. [from soil.] Stain; pollution.

He merits well to have her,
Not making any scruple of her soilure. Shakespeare.

To So'JOURN. v. n. [sojourner, French; soggiornare, Italian.] To dwell any where for a time; to live as not at home; to inhabit as not in a settled habitation. Almost out of use.

If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shakespeare.

Th' advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's. Shakespeare.

How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how creeps acquaintance? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Here dwells he; though he sojourn every where
In progress, yet his standing house is here. Donne.

The sojourning of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. Exod. xii. 40.

The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourn'd three days. Hayward.

To sojourn in that land

He comes invited. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees abroad to the state of things at home. Atterbury.

So'JOURN. n. f. [sojour, French, from the verb.] A temporary residence; a casual and no settled habitation. This word was anciently accented on the last syllable: Milton accents it indifferently.

The princes, France and Burgundy,
Long in our court have made their am'rous sojourn. Shakespeare.

There I revisit now,
Erepa'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
In that obscure sojourn. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Scarce view'd the Galilean towns,
And once a-year Jerusalem, few days
Short sojourn. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

So'JOURNER. n. f. [from sojourn.] A temporary dweller.

We are strangers and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow. 1 Chron. xxix. 16.

Waves o'erthrew
Bustirs, and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they purfu'd
The sojourners of Goshen. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not for a night, or quick revolving year,
Welcome an owner, not a sojourner. Dryden.

To So'LACE. v. a. [solacium, old French; solazzare, Italian; solatium, Latin.] To comfort; to cheer; to amuse.

We will with some strange pastime solace them. Shakespeare.

The birds with song
Solac'd the woods. Milton.

To SOLACE. v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. The neutral sense is obsolete.

Give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and my age would ease. Shak. H. VI.

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my fight. Shakespeare.

Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might

SOL

Though fight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestic ease, Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad. Milton's Agonistes.
Through waters, and through flames I'll go, Suff'r and solace of thy woe. Prior.

SOL'ANDER. n. f. [soulandres, Fr.] A disease in horses. Dill.
SOL'AR. n. f. [solaire, French; solaris, Latin.]
SOL'ARY. adj. [solaire, French; solaris, Latin.]

1. Being of the sun.
The corpuscles that make up the beams of light be solary effluvia, or minute particles of some ethereal substance, thrilling on one another from the lucid body. Boyle.

Instead of golden fruits,
By genial show'rs and solar heat supply'd,
Unflattering Winter hath defac'd
Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste. Blackm.

2. Belonging to the sun.
They denominate some herbs solar, and some lunar. Bacon.
Scripture hath been punctual in other records, concerning solary miracles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Born under or in the predominant influence of the sun.
The cock was pleas'd to hear him speak so fair,
And proud beside, as solar people are. Dryden.

4. Measured by the sun.
The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months. Holder on Time.

SOLD. n. f. [soldes, old French. Trevoux.] Military pay;
warlike entertainment.

But were your will her sold to entertain,
And number'd be amongst knights of maidenhead,
Great guerdon, well I wot, should you remain,
And in her favour high be reckoned. Fairy Queen.

SOLDAN. n. f. [sultan.] The emperor of the Turks.
They at the soldan's chair defy'd the best. Milton.

SOLDANEL. n. f. [soldanella, Latin.] A plant.
It grows on the Alps, and several other mountainous places of Italy, Germany, and Hungary. They are plants of humble growth, seldom rising above six or eight inches high: their round leaves grow close to the ground, from between which the flower-stems arise, each of which have four or five flowers, of a fine blue colour, or of a snow-white, which hang down,
and are shaped like bells. Miller.

TO SOLDER. v. a. [solder, Fr. soldare, Ital. solidare, Latin.]
See SODER.

1. To unite or fasten with any kind of metallick cement.
A concave sphere of gold, filled with water, and soldered up, has, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without burbling or cracking the body of the gold. Newton's Opt.

2. To mend; to unite any thing broken.
It booteth them not thus to solder up a broken cause, where of their first and last discourses will fall asunder. Hooker.
Wars 'twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men Should solder up the rift. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Thou visible god,
That solder'st close impossibilities,
And mak'st them kifs! Shakef. Timon.

Learn'd he was in med'nal lore;
For by his side a pouch he wore,
Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder. Hudibras.

The naked cynick's jar ne'er flames; if broken,
'Tis quickly solder'd, or a new bespoken. Dryd. jun. Juv.
At the Restoration the presbyterians, and other sects, did all unite and solder up their several schemes, to join against the church. Swift.

SOL'DER. n. f. [from the verb.] Metallick cement.
Goldsmiths say, the coarsest stuff
Will serve for solder well enough. Swift.

SOL'DERER. n. f. [from solder.] One that solders or mends.
SOLDIER. n. f. [soldat, Fr. from solidarius, low Latin, of solidus, a piece of money, the pay of a soldier; soldat, French.]

1. A fighting man; a warrior. Originally one who served for pay.
Your sifter is the better soldier. Shakef. King Lear.

Good Siward,
An older and a better soldier none. Shakef. Macbeth.

A soldier,
Full of strange oaths, and bearded like a pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Ev'n in the cannon's mouth. Shakef. Henry V.

This attempt
I'm soldier to, and will abide it with A prince's courage. Shakef. Cymbeline.

I have not yet forgot I am a king:
If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier. Dryd. Don Sebastian.

2. It is generally used of the common men, as distinct from the commanders.
It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier. Stenfor on Ireland.

SOLDIERLIKE. adj. [soldier and like.] Martial; warlike;
SOLDIERLY. adj. military; becoming a soldier.
Although at the first they had fought with beastly fury rather than any soldierly discipline, practice had now made them comparable to the best. Sidney.

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldierlike word, and a word of good command. Shakef. Henry IV.
They according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the sword of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place. Hayward.

Enemies as well as friends confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side. Carand n.

SOLDIERSHIP. n. f. [from soldier.] Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier.
Thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership: he did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciple of the bravest. Shak. All's well that ends well.

By sea you throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land, Disfract your army, which doth most consist Of war-mark'd footmen. Shakef. Henry V.

SOLDIERY. n. f. [from soldier.]
1. Body of military men; soldiers collectively.
The Memphian soldiers,
That swell'd the Erythrean wave, when wall'd,
The unfroze waters marvellously flood. Philipp.

I charge not the soldiers with ignorance and contempt of learning, without allowing exceptions. Swift.

2. Soldiering; martial skill.
Offering him, if he would exercise his courage in soldiers, he would commit some charge unto him under his lieutenant Philanax. Sidney.

SOLE. n. f. [solum, Latin.]
1. The bottom of the foot.
I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot he is all mirth. Shakef. Much Ado about Nothing.

Tickling is most in the soles of the feet: the cause is the rareness of being touched there. Bacon's Nat. History.

The soles of the feet have great affinity with the head and the mouth of the stomach; as going wet-shod, to those that use it not, affecteth both. Bacon's Natural History.

Such resting found the sole of unblest feet. Milton.

In the make of the camel's foot, the sole is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick, soft, and somewhat callous skin; but very fit to travel in sandy places.
Ray on the Creation.

2. The foot.
To redeem thy woful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever-dying dread,
Hast wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet cease not thy weary soles to lead. Fairy Queen.

3. The bottom of the shoe.
Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.
—Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes,
With nimble soles. Shakef. Romeo and Juliet.

A trade that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, fir, a mender of bad soles. Shakef. Julius Caesar.

On fortune's cap we are not the very button.—Nor the sole of her shoe. Shakef. Hamlet.

The caliga was a military shoe, with a very thick sole, tied above the instep with leather thongs. Arbutnot on Caim.

4. The part of any thing that touches the ground.
The strike-block is a plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the shooting of a short joint. Moxon's Mach. Exerc.

Elm is proper for mills, soles of wheels, and pipes. Martini.

5. A kind of sea-fish.
Of flat fish, rays, thornbacks, soles, and flowks. Carac.

TO SOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with soles: as,
to sole a pair of shoes.
His feet were soled with a treble tuft of a clove short tawney down. Greav's Misjourn.

SOLE. adj. [sol, old French; solus, Latin.]
1. Single; only.
Take not upon thee to be judge alone: there is no sole judge but only one: say not to others, receive my sentence, when their authority is above thine. Hooker.

Orpheus every where expressed the infinite end sole power of one God, though he used the name of Jupiter. Raleigh.

To me shall be the glory sole among Th' infernal pow'rs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A rattling

SOL

A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stripp'd them bare, and one sole way they rent. Dryd.
He, sole in power, at the beginning said,
Let sea and air, and earth and heav'n be made:
And it was so; and when he shall ordain
In other sort, has but to speak again,
And they shall be no more. Prior.

2. [In law.] Not married.
Some others are such as a man cannot make his wife,
though he himself be sole and unmarried. Ayliffe.

SOLECISM. n. f. [solécisme.] Unfitness of one word to another; impropriety in language. A barbarism may be in one word, a solecism must be of more.

There is scarce a solecism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript. Addison.

SOL'ELY. adv. [from sole.] Singly; only.
You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left solely heir to all his lands. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

This night's great business Shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterydom. Shakef. Henry V.

The interperate heat of the clime solely occasions this complexion, experience admits not. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety. Atterbury.

SOLEMN. adj. [solemnis, French; solemnis, Latin.]
1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.
The worship of this image was advanced, and a solemn supplication observed every year. Stillingfleet.

2. Religiously grave.
His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd. Milton.

3. Awful; striking with seriousness.
Then 'gan he loudly through the house to call,
But no one care to answer to his cry;
There reign'd a solemn silence over all. Fairy Queen.

To 'twage with solemn touches troubled thoughts. Milt.
Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling. Milton.

4. Grave; affectually serious.
When Steele reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succession of laws and oaths, he thinks all fear vanisheth: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing; because though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn convocation, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn barrier. Swift.

SOLENNITY. n. f. [solemnitas, French; from solemn.]
1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.
Great was the cause, our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, fav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope.

2. Religious ceremony.
The lady Constance,
Some speedy messenger bid repair
To our solemnity. Shakef. King John.

The moon, like to a silver bow,
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities. Shakef. Henry V.

There may be great danger in using such compositions in churches, at arraignments, plays, and solemnities. Bacon.

What fun'ral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity? Dryd.

Though the forms and solemnities of the last judgment may bear some resemblance to those we are acquainted with here, yet the rule of proceeding shall be very different. Atterbury.

4. Manner of acting awfully serious.
With much more skillful cruelty, and horrible solemnity, he caused each thing to be prepared for his triumph of tyranny. Sid.

The stateliness and gravity of the Spaniards shews itself in the solemnity of their language. Addison's Spectator.

6. Awful grandeur; grave stateliness; sober dignity.
A diligent decency was in Polycletus, above others; to whom though the highest praise be attributed by the most, yet some think he wanted solemnity. Watson's Architecture.

7. Affecting gravity.
Prythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnity's out o' door,
And go along with us. Shakef. Coriolanus.

This speech ended with a solemnity of accent. Pam. Quixote.
SOLENNIZATION. n. f. [from solemnize.] The act of solemn- nizing; celebration.

Soon followed the solemnization of the marriage between Charles and Anne dutches of Bretagne, with whom he received the duchy of Bretagne. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO SOLENNIZE. v. a. [solemnizer, French; from solemn.]
1. To dignify by particular formalities; to celebrate.
Dorlaus in a great battle was deprived of life; his obsequies being no more solemnized by the tears of his partakers than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.

Baptism to be administered in one place, and marriage solemn- ized in another. Hooker.

Then 'gan they sprinkle all the parts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day. Fairy Queen.
The multitude of the celestial host were heard to solemnize his miraculous birth. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

Their choice nobility and flower Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton's Agonist.

2. To perform religiously once a year.
What commandment the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized even by our Saviour himself. Hooker.

SOLENNLY. adv. [from solemn.]
1. With annual religious ceremonies.
2. With formal gravity and stateliness.
There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly. Bacon's Essays.

Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakef. H. V.

4. With affected gravity.
The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners, with selected friends, withdraw;
There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.

5. With religious seriousness.
To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader, that he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection. Swift.

TO SOLICIT. v. a. [solicito, Latin.]
1. To importune; to intreat.
If you bethink yourself of any crime,
Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace,
Solicit for it straight. Shakef. Othello.

We heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land. Shak. R. III.

How he solicits heav'n
Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shakef. Hamlet.

This in obedience hath my daughter shewn me,
And, more above, hath his soliciting,
As they fell out by time, by means and place,
All given to mine ear. Shakef. Hamlet.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay,
To mold me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me? Milt. Par. Lost, b. x.

The guardian of my faith so false did prove,
As to solicit me with lawless love. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

2. To call to action; to summon; to awake; to excite.
This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good. Shakef. Macbeth.

Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount
Her nat'ral graces, that extinguish art. Shakef. H. VI.

That fruit solicited her longing eye. Milton.

Sounds and some tangible qualities solicit their proper senses, and force an entrance to the mind. Locke.

He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in for-bidden liberties. Rogers's Sermons.

With that she wept again, 'till he again soliciting the conclusion of her story, then must you, said she, know the story of Amphialus. Sidney.

4. To attempt; to try to obtain.
I view my crime, but kindle at the view,
Repent old pleasures, and solicit new. Pope.

5. To disturb; to disquiet. A Latinism.
Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid.
I find your love, and would reward it too;
But anxious fears solicit my weak breast. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

SOLICITATION. n. f. [from solicit.]
1. Importunity; act of importuning.
I can produce a man
Of female feed, far abler to resist
All his solicitations, and at length
All his vast force, and drive him back to hell. Parad. Reg.

2. Invitation; excitement.
Children are surrounded with new things, which, by a constant solicitation of their senses, draw the mind constantly to them. Locke.

SOLICITOR. n. f. [from solicit.]
1. One who petitions for another.
Be merry, Cassio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die,
Than give thy cause away. Shakef. Othello.

Honest minds will consider poverty as a recommendation in the person who applies himself to them, and make the justice of his cause the most powerful solicitor in his behalf. Addison.

2. One who does in Chancery the business which is done by attorneys in other courts.
For the king's attorney and solicitor general, their continual use for the king's service requires men every way fit. Bacon.

SOLICITOUS.

SOL

SOLICITOUS, adj. [solicitus, Latin.] Anxious; careful; concerned. It has commonly about before that which causes anxiety; sometimes for or of. For is proper before something to be obtained.

Our hearts are pure, when we are not solicitous of the opinion and censures of men, but only that we do our duty. Tayl.
Enjoy the present, whatever it be, and be not solicitous for the future. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The colonel had been intent upon the fortifications. Clarendon.
In providing money for disbanding the armies, upon which they were marvelously solicitous, there arose a question. Clarendon.

They who were in truth zealous for the preservation of the laws, were solicitous to preserve the king's honour from any indignity, and his regal power from violation. Clarendon.
Laud attended on his majesty, which he would have been excused from, if that design had not been in view, to accomplish which he was solicitous for his advice. Clarendon.

There kept their watch the legions, while the grand
In council sat, solicitous what chance Might intercept their emperor's tent. Milton's Par. Lost.

Without sign of boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton's Par. Reg.

No man is solicitous about the event of that which he has in his power to dispose of. South's Sermons.

You have not only been careful of my fortune, the effect of your nobleness, but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.

The tender dame, solicitous to know Whether her child should reach old age or no, Consults the sage Tiresias. Addison.

SOLICITOUSLY, adv. [from solicitous.] Anxiously; carefully. The medical art being conversant about the health and life of man, doctrinal errors in it are to be solicitously avoided. Boyle.

He would surely have as solicitously promoted their learning, as ever he obstructed it. Decay of Piety.

SOLICITUDE, n. f. [solicitude, Latin.] Anxiety; carefulness.

In this, by comparison, we behold the many cares and great labours of worldly men, their solicitude and outward shews, and publick ostentation, their pride, and vanities. Raleigh.

If they would but provide for eternity with the same solicitude, and real care, as they do for this life, they could not fail of heaven. Tillotson's Sermons.

They are to be known by a wonderful solicitude for the reputation of their friends. Tatler.

SOLICITRESS, n. f. [Feminine of solicitor.] A woman who petitions for another.

I had the most earnest solicitrices, as well as the fairest; and nothing could be refused to my lady Hyde. Dryden.

SOLID, adj. [solidus, Latin; solide, French.]

1. Not liquid; not fluid.
Land that ever burn'd
With solid, as the lake with liquid fire. Milton.

2. Not hollow; full of matter; compact; dense.
I hear his thund'ring voice resound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground. Dryden.

3. Having all the geometrical dimensions.
In a solid foot are 1728 solid inches, weighing 76 pound of rain water. Arbutnot on Coins.

4. Strong; firm.
The duke's new palace is a noble pile built after this manner, which makes it look very solid and majestick. Addison.

5. Sound; not weakly.
If persons devote themselves to science, they should be well assured of a solid and strong constitution of body, to bear the fatigue. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

6. Real; not empty; true; not fallacious.
This might satisfy sober and wise men, not with soft and specious words, but with pregnant and solid reasons. K. Charles.

The earth may of solid good contain More plenty than the sun. Milton.

7. Not light; not superficial; grave; profound.
These, wanting wit, affect gravity, and go by the name of solid men; and a solid man is, in plain English, a solid solemn fool. Dryden.

SOLID, n. f. [In physics.] The part containing the fluids.
The first and most simple solids of our body are perhaps merely terrestrial, and incapable of any change or disease. Arb.

SOLIDITY, n. f. [Soliditas, Fr. soliditas, Lat. from solus.]

1. Fullness of matter; not hollowness.
Firmness; hardness; compactness; density.

2. That which hinders the approach of two bodies, when they are moving one towards another, I call solidity. Locke.

The stone itself, whether naked or invested with earth, is not by its solidity secured, but washed down. Woodward.

3. Truth; not fallaciousness; intellectual strength; certainty.
The most known rules are placed in the beautiful a light, that they have all the graces of novelty; and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity. Addison's Spectator.

SOL

His fellow-peers have attended to his eloquence, and have been convinced by the solidity of his reasoning. Prior.

SOLIDLY, adv. [from solid.]

1. Firmly; densely; compactly.
2. Truly; on good grounds.

A complete brave man ought to know solidly the main end he is in the world for. Disby.

I look upon this as a sufficient ground for any rational man to take up his religion upon, and which I defy the subtlest atheist in the world solidly to answer; namely, that it is good to be sure. South.

SOLIDNESS, n. f. [from solid.] Solidity; firmness; density. It beareth misfortune: the cause may be the closeness and solidness of the wood and pith of the oak. Bacon.

It is built with that unusual solidness, that it seems he intended to make a sacrifice to perpetuity, and to contend with the iron teeth of time. Howell's Vocal Forest.

SOLIDUNGULOUS, adj. [Solidus and ungula, Latin.] Whole-hoofed.

It is set down by Aristotle and Pliny, that an horse and all solidungulous or whole-hoofed animals have no gall, which we find repugnant unto reason. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SOLIFIDIAN, n. f. [solus and fides, Latin.] One who supposes only faith, not works, necessary to justification.

It may be justly feared, that the title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church of God, at which so many myriads of solifidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond.

SOLILOQUY, n. f. [Soliloquus, Fr. solus and loquer, Lat.] A discourse made by one in solitude to himself.

The whole poem is a soliloquy: Solomon is the person that speaks: he is at once the hero and the author; but he tells us very often what others say to him. Prior.

He finds no respite from his anxious grief,
Then seeks from his soliloquy relief. Garrick's Dispensary.

If I should own myself in love, you know lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy. Spectator.

SOLIPED, n. f. [solus and pedes, Lat.] An animal whose feet are not cloven.

Solipeds, or firm footed animals, as horses, asses, and mules, are in mighty number. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Him fair Lavinia
Shall breed in groves to lead a solitary life. Dryden's Æn.

2. Retired; remote from company.
In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Shakespeare.

3. Gloomy; dismal.
Let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein. Job.

4. Single.
Nor did a solitary vengeance serve: the cutting off one head is not enough; the eldest son must be involved. K. Charles.

Relations alternately relieve each other, their mutual currences supporting their solitary infirmities. Brown.

SOLITARY, n. f. [from the adjective.] One that lives alone; an hermit.

You describe so well your heremetic state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave, with a spring, or any of the accommodations that best a solitary. Pope's Letter.

SOLITUDE, n. f. [Solitude, French; solitudo, Latin.]

1. Lonely life; state of being alone.
It had been hard to have put more truth and untruth together, in few words, than in that speech; whoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a god. Bacon.

What call'st thou solitude? Is not the earth
With various living creatures, and the air,
Replenish'd, and all these at thy command
To come, and play before thee? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such only can enjoy the country who are capable of thinking when they are there: then they are prepared for solitudes, and in that solitude is prepared for them. Dryden.

2. A lonely place; a desert.
Some solitarily drieth their hops on a kel,
And some on a solus, oft turning them wel. Tusser.

SOLSTICE, n. f. [solstice, French; solstitium, Latin.]

1. The point beyond which the sun does not go; the tropical point; the point at which the day is longest in Summer, or shortest in Winter.
2. It is taken of itself commonly for the Summer solstice. The sun, ascending unto the northern signs, begetteth first a temperate heat in the air, which by his approach unto the solstice he intendeth, and by continuation increaseth the same even upon declination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Let the plowmen's prayer
Be for moist solstices, and Winters fair. May's Virgil.

SOLSTITIAL, adj. [solstitial, French; from solstice.]

1. Belonging to the solstice.
Observing the dog-days ten days before and after the equinoctial and solstitial points, by this observation alone, are exempted a hundred days. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Happening at the solstice.
From the North to call Decrepid Winter; from the South to bring Solstitial Summer's heat. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fields labour'd with thirst; Aquarius had not shed
His wonted showers, and Sirius parch'd with heat Solstitial the green herbs. Philips.

SOLUBLE, adj. [from solvo.] Possible to be cleared by reason or inquiry.
Intellective memory I call an act of the intellective faculty, because it is wrought by it, though I do not inquire how or where, because it is not soluble. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. At one time, opposed to sometimes, or to another time.
The body passive is better wrought upon at sometimes than at others.

Sometimes the one, and sometimes the other, may be glanced upon in these scripture descriptions.

He writes not always of a piece, but sometimes mixes trivial things with those of greater moment: sometimes also, though not often, he runs riot, and knows not when he has said enough.

SOMEWHAT. n. f. [some and what.]
1. Something; not nothing, though it be uncertain what.
Upon the sea somewhat methought did rise
Like bluefish mists.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, on purpose to avoid the sight of somewhat that displeases him, would, for the same reason, shut them against the sun.

2. More or less.
Concerning every of these, somewhat Christ hath commanded, which must be kept till the world's end: on the contrary side, in every of them somewhat there may be added, as the church judges it expedient.

These fals have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixt with a smatch of vitriolick.

3. Part greater or less.
Somewhat of his good sense will suffer in this transfusion, and much of the beauty of his thoughts will be lost.

SOMEWHERE. adv. [some and where.] In one place or other;
not nowhere.

Hopeless and forelorn
They are return'd, and somewhere live obscurely. Denham.

Compressing two primas hard together, that their sides, which by chance were a very little convex, might somewhere touch one another, I found the place in which they touched to become absolutely transparent, as if they had there been one continued piece of glass.

Does something still, and somewhere yet remain,
Reward or punishment?

Of the dead we must speak gently; and therefore, as Mr.
Dryden says somewhere, peace be to its manes.

SOMEWHERE. n. f. [some and where.] Once; for a time. Out of use.

Though under colour of the shepherds somewhere,
There crept in wolves full of fraud and guile,
That often devoured their own sheep,
And often the shepherd that did 'em keep.

 Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.
TO SOPHISTICATE. v. a. [from sophistiquer, Fr. from sophiste.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.
 If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophisticate the understanding, they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth, where scarce any probable there appeareth. Hobbes.
 Here's three of us are sophisticated. Shakespeare.
 Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Boyle.
 The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophisticated nature and philosophy, were the Stoicks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicit acts of man's will. South's Sermons.
 Yet the rich cullies may their boasting fare; They purchase but sophisticated ware: 'Tis prodigality that buys deceit, Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryden.
 The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colourless, left it should tinge and sophisticate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Boyle.
SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterated; not genuine.
 Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterated, though all bears the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophisticated and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Gloucester.
 So truth, when only one supply'd the state, Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticated. Dryden.
SOPHISTICATION. n. f. [from sophistication, Fr. from sophistiquer.] Adulteration; not genuineness.
Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain. Quincy.
 The drugs and simples sold in shops, generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial. Boyle.
 Besides easy submission to sophistication of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasoners. Gloucester.
SOPHISTICATOR. n. f. [from sophistication.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.
SOPHISTRY. n. f. [from sophistia.] Fallacious ratiocination.
 His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Shakespeare.
 These men have obscured and confounded the nature of things, by their false principles and wretched sophistry; tho' an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt. South.

 How, Didius, shall a Roman sore repul'd Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
 How bid you welcome to these flatter'd legions? A. Phillips.
SOREHON. n. f. [Irish and Scottish.] A kind of arbitrary soreh. } exaction or servile tenure, formerly in Scotland, as likewise in Ireland; whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands giliwitts, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to soreh, or be a soreh. Maclean.
 They exact upon them all kind of services; yea, and the very wild exactions, coignie, livery, and sorehon; by which they poll and utterly undo the poor tenants and freeholders under them. Spenser's Ireland.
SOREL. n. f. [Diminutive of sore.]
 The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a sorel. Shakespeare.
SORELY. adv. [from sore.]
 1. With a great degree of pain or distress.
 Here's the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!—What a sigh is there? the heart is sorely overcharged. Shakespeare.
 The warrior train, Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain. Dryden.
 2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive.
 I have done ill, Of which I do accuse myself sorely, That I will enjoy no more. Shakespeare.
SORENESS. n. f. [from sore.] Tenderness of a hurt.
 He that, whilst the soreness of his late pangs of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work. Deay of Piety.
 My foot began to swell, and the pain allwaged, though it left such a soreness, that I could hardly suffer the cloaths of my bed. Temple.
SORITES. n. f. [from sortes.] Properly an heap. An argument where one proposition is accumulated on another.
 Chrysippus the Stoick invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called sortes, or a heap.
Sorites is when several middle terms are chosen to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its predicate with the first subject. Thus, all men of revenge have their souls often uneasy; uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be one's own plague is folly in the extreme. Watts's Logic.

SOR

SORORICIDE. n. f. [soror and cado.] The murder of a sister.
SORRAGE. n. f. The blades of green wheat or barley. DiG.
SORRANCE. n. f. [In farriery.] Any disease or sore in horses. DiG.

SORREL. n. f. [Rube, Saxon; foral, French.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taste. Miller.

Of all roots of herbs the root of sorrel goeth the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of sorrel, the virtues of which lie in acid atringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious alkali. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SORRILY. adv. [from sorry.] Meanly; poorly; despicably; wretchedly; pitably.

Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help though I sing sorribly. Sidney.
SORRINESS. n. f. [from sorry.] Meanness; wretchedness; pitableness; despicableness.

SORROW. n. f. [Sorg, Danish.] Grief; pain for something past; sadness, mourning. Sorrow is not commonly understood as the effect of present evil, but of lost good.

Sorrow is uneasiness in the mind, upon the thought of a good lost, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the sense of a present evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you;
 That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakespeare.
 A world of woe and sorrow. Milton.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;
 But having you, can flow no sorrow now. Dryden.

TO SORROW. v. n. [Saurgan, Gothick; ronjan, Sax.] To grieve; to be sad; to be dejected.

The miserable change, now at my end,
 Lament, nor sorrow at. Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

Where-ever sorrow is relief would be,
 If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
 By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
 Were both extermin'd. Shakespeare.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance. 2 Cor. vii. 9.

I neither fear to die nor desire to live; and having mastered all grief in myself, I desire no man to sorrow for me. Hayw.

Send them the prince explores
 The night ring main, and sorrowing treads the shores. Pope.

SORROWED. adj. [from sorrow.] Accompanied with sorrow.
 Out of use.

Now the public body, which doth seldom Play the recanter, feeling in itself
 A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
 Of its own fall, refraining aid to Timon;
 And sends forth us to make their sorrowed tender. Shakspeare.

SORROWFUL. adj. [sorrow and full.]

1. Sad for something past; mournful; grieving.
 Blessed are they which have been sorrowful for all thy scourges; for they shall rejoice for thee, when they have seen all thy glory. Tob. xiii. 14.

2. Deeply serious. Not in use.
 Hannah said, no, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have poured out my soul before the Lord. 1 Sam.

3. Expressing grief; accompanied with grief.
 The things that my soul refused to touch are as my sorrow- ful meat. Job. vi. 7.

SORRY. adj. [rantz, Saxon.]

1. Grieved for something past. It is generally used of slight or casual misadventures or vexations, but sometimes of greater things. It does not imply any long continuance of grief.

O, forget
 What we are sorry for ourselves in thee. Timon of Athens.
 The king was sorry; nevertheless for the oath's sake he commanded the Baptist's head to be given her. Matth. xiv. 9.
 I'm sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure. Shak.

We are sorry for the satire interpered in some of these pieces, upon a few people, from whom the highest provocations have been received. Swift.

2. [From saur, filth, Islandick.] Vile; worthless; vexatious.
 A salt and sorry rheum offends me:
 Lend me thy handkerchief. Shakespeare's Othello.

How now, why do you keep alone?
 Of sorry fancies your companions making,
 Using those thoughts, which should, indeed, have died
 With them they think on. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

If the union of the parts consist only in rest, it would seem that a bag of dust would be of as firm a consistence as that of marble; and Bajazet's cage had been but a sorry prison. Glanv.

Coarse complexions,
 And cheeks of sorry grain will serve to ply
 'I be famper, and to teize the housewife's wool. Milton.

How vain were all the ensigns of his power, that could not support him against one slighting look of a sorry slave! L'Estr.

If this innocent had any relation to his Thebais, the poet might have found some sorry excuse for detaining the reader.

If such a slight and sorry business as that could produce one organical body, one might reasonably expect, that now and then a dead lump of dough might be leavened into an animal.
Bentley's Sermons.

SORT. n. f. [sorte, French.]

1. A kind; a species.
 Disfigur'd more than spirit of happy sort. Milton.

A substantial and unaffected piety, not only gives a man a credit among the sober and virtuous, but even among the vicious sort of men. Tillotson.

These three sorts of poems should differ in their numbers, designs, and every thought. Walsh.

 As she doth laugh at me, and makes my pain her sport. Spenser's Sonnet.

Rheum and Shimshal wrote after this sort. Exra iv. 8.
 To Adam in what sort shall I appear? Milton.

3. A degree of any quality.
 I have written the more boldly unto you, in some sort, as putting you in mind. Rom. xv. 15.

I shall not be wholly without praise, if in some sort I have copied his file. Dryden.

4. A class, or order of persons.
 The one being a thing that belongeth generally unto all, the other, such as none but the wiser and more judicious sort can perform. Hooker.

I have bought
 Golden opinions from all sorts of people. Shakespeare.

Hospitality to the better sort, and charity to the poor, two virtues that are never exercised so well as when they accompany each other. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. A company; a knot of people.
 Mine eyes are full of tears: I cannot see;
 And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
 But they can see a sort of traitors here, Shakespeare.

6. Rank; condition above the vulgar.
 Is signior Montano returned from the wars?—I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort. Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

 These they sorted into their several times and places; some to begin the service of God with, and some to end; some to be interlaid between the divine readings of the law and prophets. Hooker.

I come to thee for charitable licence,
 To sort our nobles from our common men. Shakespeare.

A piece of cloth made of white and black threads though the whole appear neither white nor black, but grey; yet each remains what it was before, if the threads were pulled asunder, and sorted each colour by itself. Boyle.

Shell-fish have been, by some of the ancients, compared and sorted with the insects. Bacon's Natural History.

With this desire, the hath a native might
 To find out every truth, if he had time;
 Th' innumerable effects to sort aright,
 And by degrees from cause to cause to climb. Davies.

The number of simple ideas, that make the nominal essence of the lowest species, or first sorting of individuals, depends on the mind of man. Locke.

The rays which differ in refrangibility may be parted and sorted from one another, and that either by refraction, or by reflexion. Newton's Opticks.

But grant that actions best discover man,
 Take the most strong and sort them as you can;
 The few that glare, each character must mark:
 You balance not the many in the dark. Pope.

2. To reduce to order from a state of confusion.
 Let me not be light;
 For a light wife doth make a heavy husband;
 And never be Bassanio to from me;
 But God sort all! Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

3. To conjoin; to put together in distribution.
 For, when the sorts things present with things past,
 And thereby things to come doth off foresee;
 When the doth doubt at first, and chafe at first,
 These acts her own, without her body be. Davies.

4. To

SOT

4. To cull; to chuse; to select.
 Send his mother to his father's house,
 That he may sort her out a worthy spouse. Chapman.

TO SORT. v. n.

1. To be joined with others of the same species.
 Nor do metals only sort and herd with metals in the earth, and minerals with minerals; but both in common together. Woodward.

2. To consort; to join.
 The illiberality of parents towards their children, makes them base and sort with any company. Bacon.

3. To suit; to fit.
 A man cannot speak to a son but as a father; whereas a friend may speak as the case requires, and not as it sorteth with the person. Bacon.

They are happy whose natures sort with their vocations.
Bacon.

Among unequals, what society
 Can sort, what harmony, or true delight?
 Which must be mutual, in proportion due,
 Given, and receiv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The Creator calling forth by name
 His mighty angels, gave them several charge,
 As sorted best with present things. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For diff'rent stiles with diff'rent subjects sort,
 As several garbs with country, town, and court. Pope.

4. To terminate; to issue.
 It sorted not to any fight of importance, but to a retreat.
Bacon's War with Spain.

5. To have success.
 The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain, but they have not sorted to the same purpose as in their native country. Abbot's Description of the World.

It was tried in a blown bladder, whereunto flesh and a flower were put, and it sorted not; for dry bladders will not blow, and new bladders further putrefaction. Bacon.

6. To fall out. [from sort, a lot, or sortir, to issue, French.]
 And so far am I glad it did sort,
 As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakespeare.

Princes cannot gather this fruit, except they raise some persons to be companions; which many times sorteth to inconvenience. Bacon.

SORTAL. adj. A word formed by Locke, but not yet received.
 As things are ranked under names, into sorts or species only as they agree to certain abstract ideas, the essence of each sort comes to be nothing but that idea which the sortal, if I may so call it from sort, as I do general from genus, name stands for. Locke.

SORTANCE. n. f. [from sort.] Suitableness; agreement.
 I have received
 New dated letters from Northumberland,
 Their cold intent, thus:
 Here doth he with his person, with such power
 As might hold sortance with his quality,
 The which he could not levy. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

SORTILEGE. n. f. [sortilege, Fr. sortilegium, Latin.] The act or practice of drawing lots.

SORTIMENT. n. f. [from sort.]

1. The act of sorting; distribution.
 2. A parcel sorted or distributed.

TO SORT. v. n. [A cant word.] To sit lazily on a chair; to fall at once into a chair.

 Poor Stella must pack off to town;
 From wholesome exercise and air,
 To sorting in an easy chair. Swift.

SOT. n. f. [rot, Saxon; so, French; so, Dutch.]

1. A blockhead; a dull ignorant stupid fellow; a dolt.
 Of Gloster's treachery,
 And of the loyal service of his son,
 When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot;
 And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out. Shakespeare.

This by his tongue being made his mistress's picture,
 And then a mind put in't, either our brags
 Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description
 Prov'd us unspeaking sots. Shakespeare.

Tell him that no history or antiquity can match his conduct; and presently the sot, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to measure himself by himself, which is the only sure way for him not to fall short. Saut's Sermons.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.
 Every sign
 That calls the staring sots to nasty wine.
 A furly ill-bred lord,
 That chides and snaps her up at every word:
 A brutal sot; who while he holds his head,
 With drunken filth bedaubed the nuptial bed. Granville.

TO SORT. v. a. To stupify; to besot.
 Pox on his loyalty!
 I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
 Made four and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
 A driveling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden's Span. Friar.

SOV

The potion
 Turns his brain and stupifies his mind;
 The sotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden.

TO SOT. v. n. To tipple to stupidity.
SOTTISH. adj. [from sot.]

1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; doltish.
 All's but naught:
 Patience is sottish, and impatience does Become a dog that's mad. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more desperate or more sottish, did abide in the field, of whom many were slain. Hayward.

He gain'd a king
 Ahaz his sottish conqueror. Milton.

'Tis sottish to offer at things that cannot be brought about.
L'Estrange.

How ignorant are sottish pretenders to astrology. Swift.

2. Dull with intemperance.
SOTTISHLY. adv. [from sottish.] Stupidly; dully; senselessly.

Northumberland sottishly mad with over great fortune, procured the King by his letters patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown. Hayward.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy, and superstition sottishly ignorant in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion. Glanville.

So sottishly to lose the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and so desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious folly and deplorable madness in the world. Bentley.

SOTTISHNESS. n. f. [from sottish.] Dullness; stupidity; insensibility.

Few consider what a degree of sottishness and confirmed ignorance men may sin themselves into. South's Sermons.

No sober temperate person can look with any complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South.

The first part of the text, the folly and sottishness of Atheism, will come home to their case; since they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity. Bentley's Sermons.

SOVEREIGN. adj. [soverain, French; sovrano, Spanish.]

1. Supreme in power; having no superior.
 As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; so prayer testifieth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good. Hooker.

You, my sovereign lady,
 Causeless have laid disgraces on my head. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

None of us who now thy grace implore,
 But held the rank of sovereign queen before,
 Till giddy chance, whose malice never bears
 That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
 Cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

Whether Esau, then, were a vassal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birth right, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

2. Supremely efficacious.
 A memorial of their fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy.
Hooker.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick;
 and to this preservative of no better report than a horse drench.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Love-wounded Protheus,
 My bosom, as a bed,
 Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,
 And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss. Shakespeare.

A water we call water of paradise, by that we do to it, is made very sovereign for health. Bacon.

Like the scum starv'd men did draw
 From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest
 Which were with any sovereign fatness blest. Donne.

Be cool, my friend, and hear my muse dispense
 Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense. Dryden.

SOVEREIGN. n. f. Supreme lord.
 O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
 And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakespeare.

By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,
 Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
 Oft our alliance other lands desir'd. Dryden.

SOVEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.] Supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in himself. Boyle.

SOVEREIGNTY. n. f. [soverainete, French.] Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.

Give me pardon,
 That I, your vassal, have employed and pain'd
 Your unknown sovereignty. Shakespeare.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof. Shakespeare.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have the

the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty. Davies.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be fill'd
Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n,
Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty. Milton.
Nothing does to gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren. Govern. of the Tongue.
Jove's own tree,

That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
High as his remotest boughs to heav'n ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend. Dryden.

I well foresee, when'er thy suit I grant,
That I my much lov'd sovereignty shall want,
And her new beauty may thy heart invade. Dryden.
Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God. Rogers.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocottus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus. Artabnut on Coins.

Souven. n. f. [from sou, French.] A superfluous drain.
Yet could not such mines, without great pains, and charges, if at all, be wrought; the del's would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adds or fountains to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray on the Creation.

Another of like sort, was found in sinking a fount-pit at Hagh in Lancashire. Woodward.

Souven. n. f. [from sou, French.] A fount-pit, of seck.
I am fount of them that asked not for me: I am fount of them that sought me not. Isa. lvi. 1.

The works of the Lord are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein. Psal. cxi. 2.

Soul. n. f. [rapel, Sax. sach, Dan. sual, Islandic sual, Dutch. sul.]
1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hooker.

He, he, unrepentant tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast preferred.
With twenty thousand souls confirming oaths. Shakespeare.

Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine;
But that were strange, since all things bad and good;
Since all God's creatures, mortal and divine;
Since God himself is her eternal food. Davies.

He remembered them of the promises, seals and oaths, which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage, that these being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any perjur'd act of state be dissolved. Hayward.

Eloquence the soul, long charms the sense. Milton.

2. Vital principle.
They say this town is full of cozenage,
Drug-working forerers that change the mind;
Soul-killing witches that deform the body;
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

Thou fun, of this great world both eye and soul. Milton.
Join voices all ye living souls! ye birds,
That singing up to heav'n gate ascend,
Bear on your wings, and in your notes his praise. Milton.

In common discourse and writings, we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles. Watts.

3. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.
He has the very soul of bounty. Shakespeare.
Charity the soul of all the rest. Milton.

4. Interior power.
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out. Shakespeare.

5. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.
Three wenches where I stood, cry'd:
"Alas, good soul!" Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

This is a poor mad soul; and she says up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.

The poor soul fat singing by a yew-tree,
Sing all a green willow:
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee. Shakespeare.

Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a peppercorn. Watts.

6. Human being.
The moral is the case of every soul of us. L'Estrange.
Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense,
Your change is such as does not need defence. Dryden.

It is a republic; there are in it a hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls. Addison's Italy.
My state of health none care to learn;
My life is here no soul's concern. Swift.

7. Active power.
Earth, air and seas, through empty space would rowl,
And heav'n would fly before the driving soul. Dryden.

8. Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.
9. Intelligent being in general.
Every soul in heav'n shall bend the knee. Milton.

Sou'LED. adj. [from soul.] Furnished with mind.
Gripping, and still tenacious of thy hold,
Wou'd'st thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely soul'd, Shou'd give the prizes they had gain'd before. Dryden.

Sou'LESS. adj. [from soul.] Mean; low; spiritless.
Slave, soulless villain, dog, O rarely bale! Shakespeare.

Sou'LSHOT. n. f. [from soul and shot.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Romanists.
In the Saxon times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called pecunia sepulchralis & symbalum anime, and a Saxon soul-shot. Ayliffe's Pervogen.

SOUND. adj. [rumb, Saxon.]
1. Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not diseased; not hurt.
I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indispo'd and sickly fit.
For the sound man. Shakespeare's King Lear.

He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks. Shak.
He hath received him late and sound. Luke xv. 27.

We can preserve
Unhurt our minds, and understanding sound. Milton.
The king visits all around,
Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;
Honours the princely chiefs. Dryden.

But Cypres, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the deep. Dryden.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, on account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are all so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logic.

2. Right; not erroneous.
Whom although to know he life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our soundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him; and our safest eloquence concerning him is silence. Hooker.

Let my heart be sound in thy statutes, that I be not ashamed.
Psal. cxix. 80.

The rules are sound and useful, and may serve your devotion. Watts.

3. Stout; strong; lusty.
The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give sound strokes with their clubs, wherewith they fight, or else shoot strong shots with their bows. Abbot.

4. Valid; not failing.
They reserved their titles, tenures, and dignities whole and sound to themselves. Spenser's Ireland.

5. Fast; hearty. It is applied to sleep.
New wak'd from soundest sleep,
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid.
In balmy sweat. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SOUND. adv. Soundly; heartily; completely fast.
The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his waste words return'd to him in vain;
So sound he slept that nought might him awake. Po. Queen.

SOUND. n. f. [from sound, French.] A shallow sea, such as may be sounded.

The sound of Denmark, where ships pay toll. Camden.
Wake,
Behold I come, sent from the Stygian sounds,
As a dire vapour that had cleft the ground,
T'ingender with the night, and blast the day. Ben. Johnson.

Him young Thoofa bore, the bright increase Of Phorcy's, dreaded in the sounds and seas. Pope.

SOUND. n. f. [from sound, Fr.] A probe, an instrument used by chi-rurgeons to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.

The patient being laid on a table, pass the sound till it meet with some resistance. Sharp's Surgery.

To SOUND. v. a.
1. To search with a plummet; to try depth.
In this secret there is a gulf, which while we live we shall never sound. Hooker.

You are, Hastings, much too shallow
To sound the bottom of the after-times. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.

2. To try; to examine.
Has he never before sounded you in this business. Shakespeare.
Invites these lords, and those he meant to sound. Daniel.

And by that offer meant to sound your breast. Dryden.
I've sounded my Numidians, man by man,
And find 'em ripe for a revolt. Addison's Cato.

3. To try with the sounding line.
The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country and sounded and found it near twenty fathoms. Acts xxvii.

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of, infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding-line, he reaches no bottom. Locke.

SOUND. n. f. The cuttle-fish.
SOUND. n. f. [from son, French; sonus, Latin.]
1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.
Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marred the face of goodly poetry,
And made a monster of their fantasy. Spenser.

Come, sisters, cheer we up his frights,
And shew the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antick round. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a sound: so a long pole struck upon gravel in the bottom of the water, maketh a sound. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The warlike sound of trumpets loud. Milton.

When'er he spoke his voice was heard around,
Loud as a trumpet with a silver sound. Dryden.

That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called sound; though, 'till it affect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion. Locke.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.
He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill sound in mens ears. Locke.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not sound that must be the principle. Locke.

To SOUND. v. n.
1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.
From you sounded out the word of the Lord. Thes. i. 8.

I rumpt once more to sound at general doom. Milton.

And first taught speaking-trumpets how to sound. Dryden.

Thither the silver sounding lyres
Shall call the smiling loves and young desires. Pope.

2. To exhibit by likeness of sound.
Why do you start, and seem to fear
Things that do sound to fair?
They being told there was small hope of ease
To be expected to their evils from hence,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

This relation sounds rather like a chymical dream than a philosophical truth. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

To SOUND. v. a.
1. To cause to make a noise; to play on.
And many nymphs about them flocking round,
And many tritons, which their horns did sound. Spenser.

Michael bid sound
Th' archangel trumpet. Milton.

Misenus lay; none so renown'd
The warrior trumpet in the field to sound;
With breathing brass to kindle fierce alarms,
And rouse to dare their fate in honourable arms. Dryden.

2. To be taken or direct by a sound.
Once Jove from Ida did both hosts survey,
And, when he pleas'd to thunder, part the fray;
Here heav'n in vain that kind retreat should sound,
The louder cannon had the thunder drown'd. Waller.

3. To celebrate by sound.
Sun, sound his praise. Milton.

SO'UNDBOARD. n. f. [from sound and board.] Board which propagates the sound in organs.
Try it without any soundboard along, only harpwise at one end of the string. Bacon's Natural History.

As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes. Milton.

SO'UNDRING. adj. [from sound.] Sonorous; having a magnificent sound.
Obsolete words may then be revived, when more sounding or more significant than those in practice. Dryden.

SO'UNDLY. adv. [from sound.]
1. Healthily; heartily.
2. Lustily; stoutly; strongly.
When Duncan is asleep,
Whereto the rather shall this hard day's journey Soundly invite him. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

They did play
My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast
With other halbers made me soundly fast. Chapman's Odyssey.

Who had so often in your aid
So many ways been soundly paid;
Came in at last for better ends.
Have no concern,
Provided Punch, for there's the jest,
Be soundly maul'd, and plague the rest. Swift.

To

Their nobility and gentry are one half ruined, banished, of converted: they all soundly feel the smart of the last Irish war. Swift.

3. Truly; rightly.
The wisest are always the readiest to acknowledge, that soundly to judge of a law is the weightiest thing which any man can take upon him. Hooker.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to our religion. Bacon.

4. Fast; closely.
Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfen knight he bad him fly,
Where he slept soundly, void of evil thought. Fairy Queen.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

SO'UNDNESS. n. f. [from sound.]
1. Health; heartiness.
I would I had that corporal soundness now;
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership. Shakespeare.

2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.
In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none amongst them, saving only that some fell sooner away, and some later from the soundness of belief. Hooker.

Lelly is misled in his politics; but he hath given proof of his soundness in religion. Swift.

3. Strength; solidity.
This presupposed, it may stand then very well with strength and soundness of reason, even thus to answer. Hooker.

SOUR. n. f. [from soupe, French.] Strong decoction of flesh for the table.
Spongy morels in strong ragouts are found,
And in the soup the slimy snail is drown'd. Gay's Trivia.

Let the cook daub the back of the footman's new livery, or, when he is going up with a dish of soup, let her follow him softly with a ladle-full. Swift.

SOUR. n. f. [run, runy, Saxon; sur, Welsh.]
1. Acid; austere; pungent on the palate with astringency, as vinegar, or unripe fruit.
All sour things, as vinegar, provoke appetite. Bacon.

Their drink is sour. Hof. iv. 18.
But let the bounds of licences be fix'd,
Not things of disagreeing natures mix'd,
Not sweet with sour, nor birds with serpents join'd. Dryden.

2. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish; morose; severe.
He was a scholar,
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not. Shakespeare. H. VIII.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation, rather free than sour and reserved. Watson's Life of the Duke of Buckingham.

Tiberius, otherwise a very sour man, would punctually perform this rite unto others, and expect the same. Brown.

He said a sour thing to Laura the other day.
Sullen and sour, with discontented mien Jocasta frown'd. Pope.

3. Afflictive; painful.
Let me embrace these sour adversities;
For wise men say it is the wisest course. Shakespeare. H. VI.

4. Expressing discontent.
The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance. Gulliver's Travels.

SOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] Acid substance.
A thousand sours to temper with one sweet,
To make it seem more dear and dainty. Spenser.

To SOUR. v. a.
1. To make acid.
His angelick nature had none of that carnal leaven which ferments to the souring of ours. Decay of Piety.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One passion, with a different turn,
Makes wit inflame or anger burn:
So the sun's heat, with diff'rent pow'rs,
Ripens the grape, the liquor sours. Swift.

2. To make harsh.
Tufts of grass sour land. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To make uneasy; to make less pleasing.
Hail, great king!
To sour your happiness, I must report
The queen is dead. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

 This second source of men, while yet but few,
 With some regard to what is just and right, Shall lead their lives. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 This is the true source and original of this mischief. South.
 Of himself is none;
 But that eternal Infinite, and One,
 Who never did begin, who ne'er can end,
 On him all beings, as their source, depend. Dryden.
 3. First producer.
 Famous Greece,
 That source of art and cultivated thoughts,
 Which they to Rome, and Romans hither brought. Waller.
 SOURISH. adj. [from source.] Somewhat sour.
 By distillation we obtain a sourish spirit, which will dissolve coral. Boyle.

 The stern Athenian prince
 Then sourly smil'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
 SOUTHERNESS. n. f. [from south.]
 1. Acidity; acuteness of taste.
Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body, and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste. Bacon's Natural History.
 It's spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;
 But summer doth, like age, the sourness waste. Denham.
 He knew
 For fruit the grafted pear-tree to dispose,
 And tame to plums the sourness of the flocks. Dryd. Virgil.
 Of acid or four one has a notion from taste, sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Arbutnot.
 Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end? Pope.
 2. Asperity; harshness of temper.
 Pelagius carped at the curious neatness of mens apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too hardly thereof. Hooker.
 He was never thought to be of that superstitious sourness, which some men pretend to in religion.
 Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature. Addison's Freeholder.
 SOURSOP. n. f. [squamarum, Latin.] Custard-apple.
 It grows in several parts of the Spanish West-Indies, where it is cultivated for its fruits. Milton.

 Oyl, though it sink, they drop by drop impart;
 But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart. Pope.
 2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.
 They soused me into the flames with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies. Shakespeare.
 Who those were that run away,
 And yet gave out th' had won the day;
 Although the rabble soused them for t,
 O'er head and ears in mud and dirt. Butler.
 They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the most case-hardened of the Ironsides. Addison's Guardian.
 To SOUSE. v. n. [Of this word I know not the original.] To fall as a bird on its prey.
 Thus on some silver swan, or tim'rous hare,
 Jove's bird comes sousing down from upper air;
 Her crooked talons truss the fearful prey, Dryden's Æn.
 Then out of sight the foars,
 Jove's bird will souse upon the tim'rous hare,
 And tender kids with his sharp talons tear. Dryden's juv.
 To SOUSE. v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

 In hord and musty straw? Shakel. King Lear.
 3. An oblong mass of lead. Antiquary.
 4. An insect; a millepede. Antiquary.
 SO'WREAD. n. f. [cyclamen, Latin.] A plant.
 It hath a thick round fleshy root: the flowers arise singly upon pedicles from the root, which consist of one leaf divided into five or six segments, which are reflexed almost to the bottom, where they are divided: the point of the flower becomes a round membranaceous fruit, which contains roundish seeds. Miller.
 To SOW. v. n. [saian, Gothick; rapan, Saxon; saegen,
 Dutch.] To scatter seed in order to a harvest.
 The one belongeth unto them that seek, the other unto them that have found happiness: they that pray do but yet sow, they that give thanks declare they have reaped. Hooker.
 The vintage shall reach unto the sowing time. Leu. xxvi. 5.
 They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy. Pf. cxxvi. 5.
 He that soweth to his flesh, shall reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall reap life everlasting. Gal. vi. 8.
 Sow to yourselves in righteousness, and reap in mercy. Isa.
 To Sow. v. a. part. pass. sown.
 1. To scatter in the ground in order to growth; to propagate by seed.
 Like was not to be found,
 Save in that soil where all good things did grow,
 And freely sprung out of the fruitful ground
 As incorrupted nature did them sow. Fairy Queen.

 SPACE. n. f. [spatium, Latin.]
 1. Room; local extension.
 Space is the relation of distance between any two bodies or points. Locke.
 Oh, undistinguish'd space of woman's wit!
 A plot upon her virtuous husband's life,
 And the exchange my brother. Shak. King Lear.
 This which yields or fills all space. Milton.
 Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.
Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end; so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.
 2. Any quantity of place.
 I would not be the villain that thou think'st
 For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
 And the rich Earth to boot. Shakel. Macbeth.
 There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods about ten miles space to Walpo. Knolls.
 In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them. Burnet.
 Measuring first with careful eyes
 The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dryden.
 3. Quantity of time.
 Nine times the space that measures day and night
 To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
 Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confounded, though immortal. Milton.
 In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight. Wilkins's Math. Mag.
 God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay 'till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. Tillotson's Sermons.
 The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease. Addison's Freeholder.
 4. A small time; a while.
 Sit for me ye fight, to me this grace
 Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space. Fairy Queen.
 Compassion quell'd
 His best of man, and gave him up to tears
 A space, 'till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.
 SPACIOUS. adj. [spacicus, Fr. spatiosus, Latin.] Wide; extensive; roomy; not narrow.

What practices such principles as these may spawn, when they are laid out to the sun, you may determine. Swift.

To SPAWN, v. n.
1. To issue as eggs from fish.

2. To issue; to proceed. In contempt.
It is ill a quality, and the mother of so many ill ones that it is ill a quality, that a child should be brought up in the greatest abhorrence of it. Locke.

SPAWNER, n. s. [from spaw.] The female fish.
The barrel, for the preservation of their seed, both the spawner and the meler cover their spawn with sand. Watts.

To SPAY, v. a. [spads, Latin.] To castrate female animals.
Be dumb you beggars of the ryming trade,
Geld your loose wits, and let your mutes be spay'd. Cleavel.

The males must be geld, and the fows spay'd; the spay'd they esteem as the most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon the inwards. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To SPEAK, v. n. [Preterite, spake or spoke; participle passive, spoken; speccan, Saxon; sprecken, Dutch.]

1. To utter articulate sounds; to express thoughts by words.
Speaking is nothing else than a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several determinations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significancies. Holder.

Hannah spake in her heart, only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard. 1 Sam. i. 13.

2. To harangue; to make a speech.
Many of the nobility made themselves popular by speaking in parliament, against those things which were most grateful to his majesty, and which still passed notwithstanding their contradiction. Clarendon.

Therites, though the most presumptuous Greek,
Yet durst not for Achilles' armour speak. Dryden.

3. To talk for or against; to dispute.
A knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, fir, is able to speak for himself when a knave is not. Shaksp.

The general and his wife are talking of it;
And the speaks for you stoutly. Shaksp.

When he had no power,
He was your enemy; still spake against Your liberties and charters. Shaksp.

4. To discourse; to make mention.
Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten of the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner. Shaksp.

Lot went out and spake unto his sons in law. Gen. xix. 14.

The fire you spake of,
If any flames of it approach my fortunes,
I'll quench it not with water, but with ruin. Ben. Johnson.

They could never be lost, but by an universal deluge which has been spoken to already. Tillotson's Sermons.

Lucan speaks of a part of Caesar's army that came to him, from the Leman-lake, in the beginning of the civil war. Add.

Had Luther spoke up to this accusation, yet Chrysolomus's example would have been his defence. Atterbury.

5. To give sound.
Make all your trumpets speak, give them all breath,
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death. Shaksp.

To SPEAK with, To address; to converse with.
Thou can't not fear us, Pompey, with thy fails,
We'll spake with thee at sea. Shaksp.

I spake with one that came from thence,
That freely render'd me these news for true. Shaksp.

Nicholas was by a herald sent for to come into the great bassa; Solyman disdain'd to spake with him himself. Kneller.

To SPEAK, v. a.
1. To utter with the mouth; to pronounce.

Saul spake not any thing that day. 1 Sam. xx. 26.

Mordecai had spoken good. Ezra. vii. 1.

Consider of it, take advice, and spake your minds. Judges.

They fat down with him upon the ground, and none spake
a word. Job ii. 13.

When divs were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed. Acts xix. 9.

You, from my youth,
Have known and try'd me, spake I more than truth? Sandy.

SPE

What you keep by you, you may change and mend,
But words once spoke can never be recall'd. Waller.

Under the tropick is our language spoke, Waller.

And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke. Waller.

He no where speaks it out, or in direct terms calls them substances. Locke.

Colours speaks all languages, but words are understood only by such a people or nation. Spectator.

2. Having the power of speech.
Say,

How can't thou speakable of mute. Milton.

SPEAKER, n. s. [from speaks.]
1. One that speaks.

These fables grew so general, as the authors were lost in the generality of speakers. Bacon's Henry VII.

In conversation or reading, find out the true sense, idea which the speaker or writer affixes to his words. Watts's Logic.

Common speakers have only one set of ideas, and one set of words to cloath them in; and these are always ready at the mouth. Swift.

2. One that speaks in any particular manner.
Horace's phrase is torret sear;

And happy was that curious speaker. Prior.

3. One that celebrates, proclaims, or mentions.
After my death, I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions

To keep mine honour from corruption. Shaksp.

4. The prolocutor of the commons.
I have disabled myself like an elected speaker of the house. Dryd.

SPEAKING Trumpet, n. s. A stentorophonick instrument; a trumpet by which the voice may be propagated to a great distance.

That with one blast through the whole house does bound,
And first taught speaking trumpet how to found. Dryden.

SPEAR, n. s. [yl-per, Welsh; ypepe, Saxon; spere, Dutch; spare, old French; sporum, low Lat.]

1. A long weapon with a sharp point, used in thrusting or throwing; a lance.

Th' Egyptian, like a hill, himself did rear,
Like some tall tree; upon it seem'd a spear. Cowley.

Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both shield and spear. Milton.

The flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

The rous'd up lion, resolute and flow,
Advances full on the pretended spear. Thomson.

2. A lance generally with prongs, to kill fish.
The borderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them, cast a strong corded net athwart the stream, with which, and their loud shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ebb have abandoned them to the hunter's mercy, who, by an old custom, share them with such indifference, as if a woman with child be present, the babe in her womb is gratified with a portion: a point also observed by the spear-hunters in taking of salmon. Carew.

To SPEAR, v. a. [from the noun.] To kill or pierce with a spear.

To SPEAR, v. n. To shoot or sprout. This is commonly written spire.

Let them not lie lest they should spear, and the air dry and spoil the shoot. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SPEARGRASS, n. s. [spear and grass.] Long stiff grass.

Tickle our noses with speargrass, to make them bleed; and then belubber our garments with it. Shaksp.

SPEARMAN, n. s. [spear and man.] One who uses a lance in fight.
The spearman's arm by thee, great God, directed,
Sends forth a certain wound. Prior.

SPEARMINT, n. s. A plant; a species of mint.

SPEARWORT, n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

SPECIAL, adj. [special, Fr. specialis, Latin.]

1. Noting a sort or species.
A special idea is called by the schools a species. Watts.

2. Particular; peculiar.
Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling. Sidney.

The several books of scripture having had each some feveral occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that spe at end whereunto they are intended. Hosker.

Of

- Of all men alive
I never yet beheld that special face,
Which I could fancy more than any other. Shakespeare.
Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shakespeare.
Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture, as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interests to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.
O Neal, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made denizen by a special act of parliament. Davies.
4. Extraordinary; uncommon.
That which necessity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free. Hooker.
Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised, but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities. Spratt's Sermons.
He bore
A paunch of the same bulk before;
Which still he had a special care
To keep well cramm'd with thrifty fare. Hudibras.
5. The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
SPECIALLY. adv. [from special.]
1. Particularly above others.
Specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord. Deutr.
A brother beloved, specially to me. Phil. xvi.
2. Not in a common way; peculiarly.
If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an attain, find it specially. Hale.
SPECIALTY. n. f. [specialité, French; from special.] Par-ticularity.
On these two general heads all other specialities are dependent. Hooker.
The packet is not come,
Where that and other specialities are bound. Shakespeare.
Speciality of rule hath been neglected. Shakespeare.
When men were sure, that in case they rested upon a bare contract without speciality, the other party might waive his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reducing the debt into a speciality which accorded many suits. Hale.
SPECIALTY. n. f. [specialty, Latin.]
1. A fort; a subdivision of a general term.
A special idea is called by the schools a species; it is one common nature that agrees to several singular individual beings: so horse is a special idea or species as it agrees to Duce-phalus, Trot, and Snowball. Watts.
2. Class of nature; single order of beings.
He intendeth only the care of the species or common natures, but letteth loose the guard of individuals or single existencies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
For we are animals no less,
Although of different species. Hudibras.
Thou nam'st a race which must proceed from me,
Yet my whole species in myself I see. Dryden.
A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human would constitute a different species, though united to a human body in the same laws of connexion: and a mind of human capacities would make another species, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion. Bentley's Sermon.
3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.
An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.
It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit it is to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.
The species of the letters illuminated with blue were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared so confused and indistinct, that I could not read them. Newton's Opticks.
4. Representation to the mind.
Wit in the poet, or wit-writing is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. Dryden.
5. Show; visible exhibition.
Shews and species serve best with the common people. Bacon.
6. Circulating money.
As there was in the time of the greatest splendour of the Roman empire, a less quantity of current species in Europe than there is now, Rome possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city.
Arbutnot on Coins.

7. Simple that have place in a compound.
SPECIFIC. adj. [specificus, French; specific and facis]
SPECIFIC. adj. [specificus, French; specific and facis]
1. That which makes a thing of the species of which it is.
That thou to truth the perfect way may'st know,
To thee all her specific forms I'll show. Denham.
The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though as to the specific nature of its acts it is determined by the object. Locke.
By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specific uniformities? Glanville.
These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specific forms of things, but as general laws of nature by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered. Newton's Opticks.
As all things were formed according to these specific platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Newton.
Specific gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight, which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Boyle.
The specific qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt and earth appear to be the same in all plants. Arbutnot.
Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquors, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grapes as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.
2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular disease. It is usually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.
The operation of purging medicines have been referred to a hidden propriety, a specific virtue, and the like shifts of ignorance. Dacot's Natural History.
If he would drink a good decoction of sassa, with the usual specifics, he might enjoy a good health. Wifeman.
SPECIFICALLY. adv. [from specific.] In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.
His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. Scull's Sermon.
Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically differ from the fantastick reason of brutes, which have no concept of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple concepts, nor of any other universal. Crow.
He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever since; and that, if an ax head be supposed to float upon water which is specifically lighter, it had been supernatural. Bentley.
TO SPECIFY. v. a. [from species and facis.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.
Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specifying, concurrent, new imperative act of the divine special providence. Hale.
SPECIFICATION. n. f. [from specific; specification, Fr.]
1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.
This specification or limitation of the question hinders the disputers from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. Particular mention.
The constitution here speaks generally without the specification of any place. Aspliff's Paragon.
TO SPECIFY. v. a. [from species; specifier, Fr.] To mention;
to show by some particular marks of distinction.
As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are such, must be great. Hester.
St. Peter doth not specify what these waters were. Burnet.
He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of their soils are specified. Pope.
SPECIMEN. n. f. [specimen, Latin.] A sample; a part of any thing exhibited that the rest may be known.
Several persons have exhibited specimens of this art before multitudes of beholders. Addison's Spectator.
SPECIOUS. adj. [speciosus, Fr. speciosus, Latin.]
1. Showy; pleasing to the view.
The rest, far greater part
Will deem in outward rites and specious forms.
Religion satisfy'd. Milton.
She next I took to wife,
O that I never had! fond with too late!
Was in the vale of Soree, Dalila,
That specious monster, my accomplish'd foate. Milton.
2. Plausible;

2. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right; striking at first view.
Bad men boast
Their specious deeds on earth which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.
Somewhat of specious they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for folly will not easily go down in its natural form. Dryden.
Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature and good manners. Rogers.
This is the only specious objection which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine of this church in the point of celebracy. Atterbury.
SPECIOUSLY. adv. [from speciosus.] With fair appearance.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and un sincerity; especially to that perfonated devotion under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised, and put off more speciously. Hammond.
SPEC. n. f. [specce, Saxon.] A small discoloration; a spot.
Every speck does not blind a man. Governor of the Tongue.
Then are they happy, when
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden's Aeneid.
TO SPECK. v. a. To spot; to stain in drops.
Flower
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold. Milton.
SPECKLE. n. f. [from speck.] Small speck; little spot.
TO SPECKLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small spots.
So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Queen.
Speck'd vanity
Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould.
Saw'st thou not late a speck'd serpent rear
His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.
The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Plead the green lurdie of the scales survey,
And with their forked tongue and pointles sting shall play. Pope's Messiah.
The tortoise here and elephant unite,
Transform'd to combs, the speck'd and the white. Pope.
SPECKT, or SPEIGHT, n. f. A wood-specker. Ainsworth.
SPECTACLE. n. f. [spectacul, Fr. spectaculum, Latin.]
1. A show; a gazing stock; any thing exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.
In open place produc'd they me,
To be a publick spectacle to all. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
We are made a spectacle unto angels, and men. 1 Cor. iv. 9.
2. Any thing perceived by the sight.
Forth riding underneath the cattle wall,
A dunghill of dead carcases he spy'd,
The dreadful spectacle of that sad house of pride. Fa. Queen.
When pronouncing sentence, seem not glad,
Such spectacles, though they are just, are sad. Denham.
3. [In the plural.] Glasses to assist the sight.
The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side.
We have helps for the sight far above spectacles and glasses. Bacon.
It is no fault in the spectacles that the blind man sees not.
Shakespeare was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards and found her there. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.
The first spectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new planets.
This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shews why their sight is mended by spectacles. Newton.
This day, then let us not be told,
That you are sick and I grown old;
Nor think on our approaching ills,
And talk of spectacles and pills.
SPECTACLED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with spectacles.
All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sight
Are spectacles to see him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
SPECTATION. n. f. [spectatio, Latin.] Regard; respect.
This simple spectation of the lungs is differenced from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey.
SPECTATOR. n. f. [spectator, Fr. spectator, Latin.] A looker on; a beholder.
More
Than history can pattern, though devis'd
And play'd, to take spectators. Shakespeare.
If it proves a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the flor. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
An old gentleman mounting on horseback got up heavily;

- but desired the spectators that they would count fourscore and eight before they judged him. Dryden.
He mourns his former vigour lost to far,
To make him now spectator of a war. Dryden.
What pleasure hath the owner more than the spectator? Seed.
SPECTRE. n. f. [spectre, Fr. spectrum, Latin.] Apparition; appearance of persons dead.
The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fanatick spectres to rejoice. Dryden.
The very poetical use of the word for a spectre, doth imply an exact resemblance to some real being it represents. Stilling.
These are nothing but spectres the understanding raises to itself to flatter its own laziness. Locke.
SPECTATORSHIP. n. f. [from spectator.] Act of beholding.
Thou stand'st i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueler in suffering. Shakespeare.
SPECTRUM. n. f. [Latin.] An image; a visible form.
This prism had some veins running along within the glass, from the one end to the other, which scattered some of the sun's light irregularly, but had no sensible effect in encreasing the length of the coloured spectrum. Newton's Opticks.
SPECTULAR. n. f. [specularis, Latin.]
1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking glass.
It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of specular stone.
Quicksilver may by the fire alone, in glass-vessels, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and specular as before. Boyle.
A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of those rings; and thence I understood that these rings arise not from specular surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass whereof the speculum was made, and upon the thickness of the glass between them. Newton.
2. Assisting sight. Improper.
The hidden way
Of nature would'st thou know, how first the frames
All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels; lo!
In each observe the slender threads
Of first-beginning trees. Philips.
TO SPECULATE. v. n. [specular, Fr. specular, Lat.] To meditate;
to contemplate; to take a view of any thing with the mind.
Consider the quantity, and not speculate upon an intrinsecal relation. Dicly on Bodies.
As our news-writers record many facts which afford great matter of speculation, their readers speculate accordingly, and by their variety of conjectures become consummate statemen.
Addison.
TO SPECULATE. v. a. To consider attentively; to look through with the mind.
Man was not meant to gape, or look upward with the eye, but to have his thoughts sublime; and not only behold, but speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SPECULATION. n. f. [speculation, Fr. from speculate.]
1. Examination by the eye; view.
2. Examiner; spy. This word is found no where else, and probably is here misprinted for speculator.
They who have, as who have not, whom their great stars
Throne and fet high? servants
Which are to France the spies and speculations, Intelligent of our state. Shakespeare's King Lear.
3. Mental view; intellectual examination; contemplation.
In all these things being fully persuaded, that what they did, it was obedience to the will of God, and that all men should do the like; there remained after speculation, practice whereunto the whole world might be framed. Hooker.
Thenceforth to speculations high or deep,
I turn'd my thoughts; and with capacious mind
Consider'd all things visible. Milton.
News-writers afford matter of speculation. Addison.
4. A train of thoughts formed by meditation.
From him Socrates derived the principles of morality, and most part of his natural speculations. Temple.
5. Mental scheme not reduced to practice.
This terrestrial globe, which before was only round in speculation, has since been furrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators.
6. Power of sight. Not in use.
Thy bones are marrowless; thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Thou star'st with. Shakespeare.
SPECULATIVE. adj. [speculatif, Fr. from speculate.]
1. Given to speculation; contemplative.
If all other uses were utterly taken away, yet the mind of man being by nature speculative and delighted with contemplation in itself, they were to be known even for meer knowledge sake. Hooker.
It encourages speculative persons who have no turn of mind to encrease their fortunes. Addison.
2. Theo-

SPE

2. Theoretical; notional; ideal; not practical.
Some take it for a speculative platform, that reason and nature would that the best should govern, but no wife to create a right. Bacon's holy War.
- SPECULATIVELY. adv. [from speculative.]
1. Contemplatively; with meditation.
2. Ideally; notionally; theoretically; not practically.
- SPECULATOR. n. f. [from speculate.]
1. One who forms theories.
He is dexterous in puzzling others, if they be not through-paced speculators in those great theories. Mare.
2. [Speculateur, French.] An observer; a contemplator.
Although lapidaries and questuary enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals, and natural speculators, conceive the stones which bear this name to be a mineral concretion. Brown.
3. A spy; a watcher.
All the boats had one speculator, to give notice when the fish approached. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
- SPECULATORY. adj. [from speculate.] Exercising speculation.
- SPECULUM. n. f. [Latin.] A mirror; a looking-glass; that in which representations are formed by reflection.
A rough and coloured object may serve for a speculum, to reflect the artificial rainbow. Boyle on Colours.
- SPEED. The preterite and part. passive of speed.
His horse full of windgalls, speed with the spavins, and rayed with the yellows. Shakespeare.
Barbarossa, speed of that he desired, staid not long at Constantinople, but shaped his course towards Italy. Knolles.
With all his harness soon the god was speed; His flying hat, wings on his heels. Dryden.
- SPEECH. n. f. [from speak.]
1. The power of articulate utterance; the power of expressing thoughts by vocal words.
There is none comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, for the communication of his thoughts. Holder on Speech.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show;
And when the fouler bottom sprews the black,
The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

3. To eject with loathing.

Keep my statutes, and commit not any of these abominations, that the land sprew not you out. Lev. xviii. 28.

Contentious suits ought to be sprewed out, as the fustian of courts. Bacon's Essay.

To SPREW. v. n. To vomit; to ease the stomach.

He could have haul'd in
The drunkards, and the noises of the inn;
But better 'twas that they should sleep or spreu,
Than in the scene to offend or him or you. Ben. Johnson.

SPREWY. adj. [from spreu.] A provincial word.

The lower valleys in wet Winters are sprewy, that they know not how to feed them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A small quantity, as of spice to the thing seasoned.

Think what they have done,
And then run stark mad; for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it. Shakespeare.

It containeth singular relations, not without some spice or sprinkling of all learning. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

So in the wicked there's no vice,
Of which the fainits have not a spice. Hudibras.

To SPICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To season with spice; to mix with aromatical bodies.

His mother was a votress of my order,
And in the spiced Indian air by night
Full often the bath g. ap'd by my side. Shakespeare.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great-grand-children of thy praises grow;
And so, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.

What though some have a freight
Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPICER. n. f. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.

Names have been derived from occupations, as Salter and Spicer. Camden.

SPICERY. n. f. [epicerie, French; from spice.]

1. The commodity of spices.

Their camels were laden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh's History of the World.

She in whose body
The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africk, and the unknown rest,
Were easily found. Downe.

2. A repository of spices.

The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison on Italy.

SPICK AND SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Sax. expandere, Lat. whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth new extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters: it is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used.

While the honour, thou hast got,
Is spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely. Butler.

They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. Burnet.

I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPICKENEL. n. f. The herb maldmony or bearwort. Dict.

SPICY. adj. [from spice.]

1. Producing spice; abounding with aromatics.

For them the Idumean balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceilon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

2. Aromatick; having the qualities of spice.

Off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabrean odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest, with such delay
Well pleas'd they slack their course, and many a league, Chear'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milton.

The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscolity. Arbutnot on Diet.

Under southern skies exalt their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPICOSITY. n. f. [spica, Latin.] The quality of being spiced like ears of corn; fulness of ears. Dict.

SPIDER. n. f. [Spinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin: Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπίς, to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from spieden, Dutch; speyden, Danish, to spy, to lye upon the catch. Don, bona, saxon, is a beetle, or properly an humble bee, or stingless bee. May not spider be spy dor, the insect that watches the dar?] The animal that spins a web for flies.

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Shakespeare.

The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand Drayton.

The innocent to free.
Insidious, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no officious damsel's broom;
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,
And spread thy banners round my room:
While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confin'd to noisome garret,
And rudely banish'd rooms of state. Dr. Littleton.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.

SPIDERWORT. n. f. [phalangium, Latin.] A plant with a lily-flower, composed of six petals. Miller.

SPINGEL. n. f. [spum, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it is an umbelliferous plant, with very narrow leaves: the seeds are large, oblong, and striated. To which may be added, it hath a perennial root. It is medicinal. Miller.

SPICOT. n. f. [spijker, Dutch.] A pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in the liquor.

Bare Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield. Shakef.

Take out the spigot, and clap the point in your mouth. Sw.

nard, enriching it with every spicy shrub. Speetator.
SPILL. n. f. [spijlen, Dutch.]
1. A small shiver of wood, or thin bar of iron.
The oysters, besides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern. Carew.
Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole, stopp'd with a spill. Mortimer.
2. A small quantity of money. I know not whence derived.
The bishops, who consecrated this ground, were wont to have a spill or sportule from the credulous laity. Ayliffe.
TO SPILL. v. a. [rpullan, Saxon; spillen, Dutch; spila, Islandick.]
1. To shed; to lose by shedding.
Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt. Shakef.
Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another. Shak. Timon.
Themselves exact their cruelty,
And I constrain'd am this blood to spill. Daniel's Civil War.
They having spill'd much blood, and done much waste, Subduing nations; and achiev'd thereby Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey, Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth. Milton.
Sichaeus' blood, by his false brother spilt,
I have reveng'd. Denham.
Medea must not draw her murth'ring knife,
And spill her children's blood upon the stage. Recommon.
Orbellan did disgrace
With treach'rous deeds our mighty mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spilt,
What is it less than to partake his guilt? Dryden.
Nor the Centaurs tale
Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflam'd, they fought and spilt their drunken souls
At feasting hour. Philips.
2. To destroy; to mischief.
Thus is our thought with pain of thistle tilled,
Thus be our noblest parts dried up with sorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much minding spilled. Sidney.
Why are ye so fierce and cruel?
Is it because your eyes have power to kill?
Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory think to save than spill. Spenser.
Thou all-shaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ingrateful man. Shakef. King Lear.
Be not angry with these fires;
For then their threats will kill me;
Nor look too kind on my desires;
For then my hopes will spill me. Ben. Johnson.
All bodies are with other bodies fill'd;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together:
Nor are their forms by rash encounters spill'd;
For there they stand, and neither toucheth either. Davies.
3. To throw away.
This sight shall damp the raging ruffian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword arrest. Tickell.
TO SPILL. v. n.
1. To waste; to be lavish.
Thy father bids thee spare, and chides for spilling. Sidney.
2. To be shed; to be lost by being shed.
He was so topfull of himself, that he let it spill on all the company: he spoke well indeed, but he spoke too long. Watts.
SPILLER. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of fishing line.
In harbour they are taken by spillers made of a cord, to which divers shorter are tied at a little distance, and to each of these a hook is fastened with a bait: this spiller they sink in the sea where those fishes have their accustomed haunt. Carew.
SPILTH. n. f. [from spill.] Any thing poured out or wasted.
Our vaults have wept with drunken spilth of wine. Shakef.
TO SPIN. v. a. preter. spun or span; part. spun. [rpinnan, Sax.
spinnen, Dutch.]
1. To draw out into threads.
The women spun goats hair. Ex. xxxv. 26.
2. To form threads by drawing out and twisting any filamentous matter.

she spun, in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths.
Shakef. Coriolanus.
The fates but only spin the coarser clue;
The finest of the wool is left for you. Dryden.
3. To protract; to draw out.
By one delay after another they spin out their whole lives, till there's no more future left before 'em. L'Estrange.
If his cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against intangling property, spinning out causes, and squeezing clients. Collier.

SPI

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No, let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last. Addison's Cat.
4. To form by degrees; to draw out tediously.
I pass'd lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might spin out large volumes. Digby.
Men of large thoughts and quick apprehensions are not to expect any thing here, but what, being spun out of my own coarse thoughts, is fitted to men of my own size. Locke.
The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say;
Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day. Pope.
TO SPIN. v. n.
1. To exercise the art of spinning.
We can fling our legs and arms upwards and downwards, backwards, forwards, and round, as they that spin. Mora.
Ten thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;
Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,
They neither know to spin, nor care to toil.
For this Alcides learn'd to spin;
His club laid down, and lion's skin. Prior.
2. [Spingere, Italian.] To stream out in a thread or small current.
Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horie and man;
The blood out of their helmets span,
So sharp were their encounters. Drayton's Nymphid.
3. To move round as a spindle.
Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun,
He from the East his flaming road begin,
Or the from West her silent course advance
With inoffensive pace, that spinning sleeps
On her soft axle, while she paces ev'n
And bears thee soft with the smooth air along, Solicit not thy thoughts. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. viii.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing 'till it scoops it out. Pope.
SPINACH. n. f. [spinachia, Latin.] A plant.
SPINAGE. n. f. [spinachia, Latin.] A plant.
It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which, in some sorts, have thorns adhering to them. Milner.
SPINAGE is an excellent herb crude, or boiled. Mortimer.
SPINAL. adj. [spina, Latin.] Belonging to the back bone.
All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are somewhat analogous thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain, and spinal marrow, which by their bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the stamina or threads of the solid parts. Art.
Descending carelessly from his couch, the fall
Lux'd his joint neck and spinal marrow bruise'd. Philips.
SPINDLE. n. f. [pimble, pimbale, Saxon.]
1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.
Bodies fibrous by moisture incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing; as appeareth by the twisting of thread, and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.
Sing to those that hold the vital sheers,
And turn the adamant spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound. Milton.
Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation as not to keep his promise, and deal merciful pardons. Dr. Jasper Maime.
So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew,
And when imperial Jove appear'd in view,
Refum'd her female arts, the spindle and the clew;
Forgot the scepter she so well had sway'd,
And with that mildness, she had rul'd, obey'd. Stepney.
Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred tamely to the spindle and the loom? A. Phillips.
2. A long slender stalk.
The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break. Mort.
3. Any thing slender. In contempt.
Repose yourself, if those spindle legs of yours will carry you to the next chair. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
The marriage of one of our heiresses with an eminent countier gave us spindle shanks and cramps. Tatler.
TO SPINDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into a long small stalk.
Another ill accident in drought is the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; insomuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.
When the flowers begin to spindle, all but one or two of the biggest, at each root, should be nipped off. Mortimer.

twist; a wreath.
His head
Crested aloft, and carbuncle his eyes;
With burnish'd neck of verdant gold, erect Amidst his circling spires, that on the grass Floated redundant. Milton.
A dragon's fiery form belied the god,
Sublime on radiant spires he rode. Dryden.
Air seems to consist of spires contorted into small spheres, through the interstices of which the particles of light may freely pass; it is light, the solid substance of the spires being very small in proportion to the spaces they take up. Cheyne.
2. Any thing growing up taper; a round pyramid, so called perhaps because a line drawn round and round in less and less circles, would be a spire; a steeple.
With glitt'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.
He cannot make one spire of grass more or less than he hath made. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

SPI

These pointed spires that wound the ambient sky, Inglorious change! shall in destruction lie. Prior.

2. [Esprit, Fr.] An immaterial substance.
Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting,
and a power of moving do subsist. Locke.
I shall depend upon your constant friendship; like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who, though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us. Pope.
She is a spirit; yet not like air, or wind;
Nor like the spirits about the heart, or brain;
Nor like those spirits which alchemists do find,
When they in ev'ry thing seek gold in vain;
For the all natures under heav'n doth pass,
Being like those spirits which God's bright face do see;
Or like himself whose image once she was,
Though now, alas! the scarce his shadow be;
For of all forms she holds the first degree,
That are to gross material bodies knit;
Yet she herself is bodyless and free;
And though confin'd is almost infinite. Davies.
If we exclude space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind, or body and spirit. Watts's Logic.
3. The soul of man.
The spirit shall return unto God that gave it. Bible.

The watry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shakespeare.
13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.
Such spirits as he desired to please, such would I chuse for my judges. Dryden.
14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body bordering, says Sydenham, on immater-ialty. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.
Though thou didst but jest:
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakespeare's King John.
When I sit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out Into my story. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies wafted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament;
What can we know, or what can we discern? Davies.
To sing thy praise, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays. Dryden.
By means of the curious lodgment and inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed.
Derham.
- In some fair body thus the secret soul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills the whole;
Each motion guides, and ev'ry nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in the effects remains.
The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.
15. The likeness; essential qualities.
Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a descending light, which of all other doth set off mens faces in their truest spirit. Watson.
16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.
Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself. Shakespeare.
17. That which hath power or energy.
All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them;
but the main difference between animate and inanimate are,
that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort; but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow.
Bacon's Natural History.
18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation.
What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many differing things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor. Boyle.
All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach. Temple.
In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil; if it will, it is spirit.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
19. It may be observed, that in the old poets spirit was commonly a monosyllable, being written spright or sprite.
The charge thereof unto a courteous spright Commanded was. Spenser.

- SPIRITEDNESS. n. f. [from spirited.] Disposition or make of mind.
He showed the narrow spiritedness, pride, and ignorance of pedants. Addison.
- SPIRITFULNESS. n. f. [from spirit and full.] Sprightliness;
liveliness.
A cocks crowing is, a tone that corresponds to singing, attending his mirth and spiritfulness. Harvey.
- SPIRITLESS. adj. [from spirit] Dejected; low; deprived of vigour; wanting courage; depressed.
A man so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe begone,
Drew Priam's curtain. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Of their wretched vigour left them drain'd, Exhausted, spiritless, afflicted, fall'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Nor did all Rome, grown spiritless, supply
A man that for bold truth durst bravely die.
Art thou so base, so spiritless a slave?
Not so he bore the fate to which you doom'd him. Smith.
- SPIRITUOUS. adj. [from spirit.] 1. Refined; defecated; advanced near to spirit.
More refin'd, more spirituous and pure,
As nearer to him plac'd, or nearer tending. Milton.
2. Fine; ardent; active.
- SPIRITUOUSNESS. n. f. [from spirituous.] Fineness and activity of parts.
They, notwithstanding the great thinness and spirituousness of the liquor, did, before they broke, lift up the upper surface, and for a moment form a thin film like a small hemisphere. Huyghs.
- SPIRITUAL. adj. [from spiritus, Fr. from spirit.] 1. Distinct from matter; immaterial; incorporeal.
Echo is a great argument of the spiritual essence of sounds; for if it were corporeal, the repercussion should be created by like instruments with the original sound. Bacon.
Both visibles and audibles in their working emit no corporeal substance into their mediums, but only carry certain spiritual species. Bacon.
All creatures, as well spiritual as corporeal, declare their absolute dependence upon the first author of all beings, the only self-existent God. Beaumont.
2. Mental; intellectual.
The same disaster has invaded his spirituals; the passions rebel; and there are so many governours, that there can be no government. South.
3. Not gross; refined from external things; relative only to the mind.
Some who pretend to be of a more spiritual and refined religion, spend their time in contemplation, and talk much of communion with God. Colan's Sermon.
4. Not temporal; relating to the things of heaven; ecclesiastical.
Place man in some public society, civil or spiritual. Hosker.
Thou art reverend,
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life. Shakespeare.
I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual convocation,
As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy did. Shakespeare.
Spiritual armour, able to resist
Satan's assaults. Milton.
The clergy's business lies among the laity; nor is there a more effectual way to forward the salvation of mens souls, than for spiritual persons to make themselves as agreeable as they can in the conversations of the world. Swift.
- SPIRITUALITY. n. f. [from spiritual.] 1. Incorporeity; immateriality; essence distinct from matter.
If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then of all other the most subtle and pure. Raighs.
2. Intellectual nature.
A pleasure made for the soul; suitable to its spirituality, and equal to all its capacities. South's Sermons.
3. [from spiritualis, Fr.] Acts independent of the body; pure acts of the soul; mental refinement.
Many secret indispositions and aversions to duty will steal upon the soul, and it will require both time and close application of mind to recover it to such a frame, as shall dispose for the spiritualities of religion. South's Sermons.
4. That which belongs to any one as an ecclesiastical.
Of common right, the dean and chapter are guardians of the spiritualities, during the vacancy of a bishoprick. Hooker.
- SPIRITUALITY. n. f. [from spiritual.] Ecclesiastical body.
We of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time. Shakespeare.
- SPIRITUALIZATION. n. f. [from spiritualize.] The act of spiritualizing.
To SPIRITUALIZE. v. a. [from spiritualis, Fr. from spirit.] To refine the intellect; to purify from the feculencies of the world;
This would take it much out of the care of the soul, to spiritualize and replenish it with good works. Hammond.

- We begin our survey from the lowest dregs of sense, and to ascend to our more spiritualized selves. Glauville.
As to the future glory in which the body is to partake, that load of earth which now engages to corruption, must be calcined and spiritualized, and thus be clothed upon with glory. Decay of Piety.
If man will act rationally, he cannot admit any competition between a momentary satisfaction, and an everlasting happiness, as great as God can give, and our spiritualized capacities receive. Rogers's Sermon.
- SPIRITUALLY. adv. [from spiritual] Without corporeal grossness; with attention to things purely intellectual.
In the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor's Rule of holy Living.
- SPIRITUOUS. adj. [from spiritus, Fr. from spirit.] 1. Having the quality of spirit, tenuity and activity of parts.
More refin'd, more spirituous and pure,
As to him nearer tending. Milton.
The most spirituous and most fragrant part of the plant exhales by the action of the sun. Arbutnot.
2. Lively; gay; vivid; airy.
It may appear airy and spirituous, and fit for the welcome of cheerful guests. Watson's Architecture.
- SPIRITUOSITY. n. f. [from spirituous.] The quality of being spirituous; tenuity and activity.
TO SPIRIT. v. n. [from spiritus, Dutch; to shoot up, Skinner; spritta, Swedish, to fly out. Lye.] To spring out in a sudden stream; to stream out by intervals.
Bottling of beer, while new and full of spirit, so that it spirited when the stopple is taken forth, maketh the drink more quick and windy. Bacon's Natural History.
Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Springs in the garden's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.
- TO SPIRIT. v. a. To throw out in a jet.
When weary Proteus
Retir'd for shelter to his wonted caves,
His finny flocks about his shepherd play,
And rowling round him, spirit the bitter sea. Dryden.
When rains the passage hide
Of the loose stones spirit up a muddy tide
Beneath thy careless foot. Gay.
- TO SPIRIT. v. a. [A corruption of spirit.] To dissipate.
The terraqueous globe would, by the centrifugal force of that motion, be soon dissipated and spirited into the circumambient space, was it not kept together by this noble contrivance of the Creator. Derham's Physico-Theology.
- SPIRIT. n. [from spiritus.] 1. Pyramidal.
Waste sandy valleys, once perplex'd with thorn,
The spirey firs, and shapely box adorn. Pope's Messiah.
In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
These moss-grown domes with spirey turrets crown'd,
Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light;
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.
2. Wreathed; curled.
Hid in the spirey volumes of the snake,
I lurk'd within the covert of a brake. Dryden.
- SEISS. adj. [from spissus, Latin.] Close; firm; thick.
From his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this spiss and dense, yet polished; this copious, yet concise treasure of the variety of languages. Brewster.
- SPISSITUDE. n. f. [from spissus, Latin.] Grossness; thickness.
Drawing wine or beer from the lees, called racking, it will clarify the looser; for though the lees keep the drink in heart, and make it lasting, yet they cast up some spissitude. Bacon.
Spissitude is subdued by acrid things, and acrimony by in-spissating. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- SPIR. n. f. [from spiritus, Saxon; spirt, Dutch; spedo, Italian.] 1. A long prong on which meat is driven to be turned before the fire.
A goodly city is this Antium;
'Tis I that made thy widows: then know me not,
Left that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones
In puny battle slay me. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
They may be contrived to the moving of sails in a chimney corner, the motion of which may be applied to the turning of a spit. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
With Peggy Dixon thoughtful sit,
Contriving for the pot and spit. Swift.
2. Such a depth of earth as is pierced by one action of the spade.
Where the earth is washed from the quick, face it with the first spit of earth dug out of the ditch. Mortimer.
- TO SPIT. v. a. Preterite spat; participle spits, or spitted, [from the noun.] 1. To put upon a spit.
I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body Upon a rapier's point. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

2. To thrust through.
I spitted frogs, I crush'd a heap of emmets. Dryden.
TO SPIT. v. a. [from sperean, Saxon; spytter, Danish.] To eject from the mouth.
A large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks and seas.
Shakespeare's King John.
Commissions which compel from each
The sixth part of his substance, makes bold mouths,
Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze Allegiance in them. Shakespeare.
- TO SPIT. v. n. To throw out spittle or moisture of the mouth.
Very good orators, when they are here, will spit. Shakespeare.
I dare meet Surrey,
And spit upon him whilst I say he lies. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
You spurn'd me such a day, Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
The watry kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come. Shakespeare.
He spat on the ground, made clay of the spittle, and anointed the eyes of the blind man. John ix. 6.
A maid came from her father's house to one of the tribunals of the Gentiles, and declaring herself a Christian, spit in the judge's face. South's Sermons.
A drunkard men abhor, and would even spit at him, were it not for fear he should something more than spit at them.
South's Sermons.
- Spit on your finger and thumb, and pinch the snuff till the candle goes out. Swift's Rules for the Servants.
- SPIITAL. n. f. [Corrupted from hospital.] A charitable foundation. In use only in the phrase, a spital sermon, and not the spital.
- TO SPITCHCOCK. v. a. To cut an eel in pieces and roast him.
Of this word I find no good etymology.
No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spit-cocked eel. King.
- SPIITE. n. f. [from spis, Dutch; despit, French.] 1. Malice; rancour; hate; malignity; malevolence.
This breeding rather spite than shame in her, or, if it were a shame, a shame not of the fault, but of the repulse, she did thirst for a revenge. Sidney.
Bewray they did their inward boiling spites,
Each stirring others to revenge their cause. Daniel.
Done all to spite
The great Creator; but their spite still serves His glory to augment. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Be gone, ye critics, and restrain your spites,
Codrus writes on, and will for ever write. Pope.
2. SPITE OF, or IN SPITE OF. Notwithstanding; in defiance of.
It is often used without any malignity of meaning.
Blessed be such a preacher, whom God made use of to speak a word in season, and saved me in spite of the world, the devil, and myself. South.
In spite of me I love, and see too late
My mother's pride must find my mother's fate. Dryden.
For thy lov'd sake, spite of my boding fears,
I'll meet the danger which ambition brings. Rowe.
My father's fate,
In spite of all the fortitude that shines
Before my face in Cato's great example,
Subdues my soul, and fills my eyes with tears. Addison's Cato.
In spite of all applications the patient grew worse every day. Arbutnot.
- TO SPITE. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To mischief; to treat maliciously; to vex; to thwart ma-lignantly.
Beguill'd, divorced, wronged, spighted, slain,
Most detestable death, by thee. Shakespeare.
I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spight a raven's heart within a dove. Shakespeare.
2. To fill with spite; to offend.
So with play did he a good while fight against the fight of Zelmane, who, more spited with that courtesy, that one that did nothing should be able to resist her, burned away with choler any motions which might grow out of her own sweet disposition. Sidney.
Darius, spited at the magi, endeavoured to abolish not only their learning but their language. Temple.
- SPITEFUL. adj. [from spite and full.] Malicious; malignant.
The Jews were the deadliest and spitefullest enemies of Christianity that were in the world, and in this respect their orders to be shunned. Hooker.
All you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spightful and wrathful. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Contempt is a thing made up of an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. South's Sermons.
The spiteful stars have shed their venom down,
And now the peaceful planets take their turn. Dryden.

SPL

SPL'ETFULLY. adv. [from spl'etful.] Maliciously; malignantly.
Twice false Evadne, spl'etfully forsworn.
That fatal beast like this I would have torn.
Vanessa fat,
Scarce list'ning to their idle chat,
Further than sometimes by a frown,
When they grew pert, to pull them down;
At last the spl'etfully was bent
To try their wisdom's full extent.
SPL'ETFULNESS. n. f. [from spl'etful.] Malice; malignity;
desire of vexing.
It looks more like spl'etfulness and ill-nature, than a diligent search after truth.
SPL'ETTED. adj. [from spl'et.] Shot out into length.
Whether the head of a deer, that by age is more spl'etted, may be brought again to be more branched.
SPL'ITTER. n. f. [from spl'it.]
1. One who puts meat on a spit.
2. One who spits with his mouth.
3. A young deer.
SPL'ITTLE. n. f. [Corrupted from spital, and therefore better written spital, or spital.] Hospital. It is still retained in Scotland.
To the spittle go,
And from the powd'ring tub of infamy
Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind.
This is it
That makes the waned widow wed again;
She whom the spittle house, and ulcerous sores,
Would cast the gorge at, this embalm and spices
To th' April-day again.
Cure the spittle world of maladies.
SPL'ITTLE. n. f. [prophan, Saxon.] Moisture of the mouth.
The saliva or spittle is an humour of eminent use.
Manas and Aty in the mouth were bred,
And never hatch'd within the lab'ring head;
No blood from bitten nails those poems drew,
But churn'd like spittle from the lips they flew.
The spittle is an active liquor, immediately derived from the arterial blood: it is saponaceous.
A genius for all stations fit,
Whose meanest talent is his wit;
His heart too great, though fortune little,
To lick a rascal statesman's spittle.
SPL'ITVENOM. n. f. [from spl'it and venom.] Poison ejected from the mouth.
The spl'itvenom of their poisoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others.
SPLANCHNOLOGY. n. f. [from splanchnologie, French; σπλάνχνη and λογία.] A treatise or description of the bowels.
To SPLASH. v. a. [from plash, Swedish.] They have both an affinity with plash. To daub with dirt in great quantities.
SPLASHY. adj. [from plash.] Full of dirty water; apt to daub.
SPLAYFOOT. adj. [from splay and foot.] Having the foot turned inward.
Though still some traces of our rustic vein,
And splayfoot verse remain'd, and will remain.
SPLAYMOUTH. n. f. [from splay and mouth.] Mouth widened by design.
All authors to their own defects are blind:
Hadst thou but Janus-like a face behind,
To see the people when splaymouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot.
SPLEEN. n. f. [from splen, Latin.]
1. The milt; one of the viscera, of which the use is scarcely known. It is supposed the seat of anger and melancholy.
If the wound be on the left hypochondrium, under the short ribs, you may conclude the spleen wounded.
2. Anger; spite; ill-humour.
If the milt teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart distatur'd torment to her.
Charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul.
Kind pity checks my spleen; brave scorn forbids
Those tears to issue, which swell my eye-lids.
All envy'd; but the Thetysian brethren show'd
The least respect; and thus they vent their spleen aloud:
Lay down those honour'd spoils.
In noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and four distain.
3. A fit of anger.
Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heav'n and earth;
And ere a man hath power to say, behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up.
4. Melancholy; hypochondriacal vapours.
Spleen, vapours, and small-pox above them all.
Bodies chang'd to recent forms by spleen.

SPL

SPLE'NED. adj. [from splen.] Deprived of the spleen.
Animals spl'ened grow falacious.
SPLE'NFUL. adj. [from splen and full.] Angry; peevish; fretful;
melancholy.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees,
That want their leader, scatter up and down;
Myself have calm'd their spl'entful mutiny.
The cheerful soldiers, with new stores supply'd,
Now long to execute their spl'entful will.
If you drink tea upon a promontory that overhangs the sea, the whistling of the wind is better music to contented minds than the opera to the spl'entful.
SPLE'NLESS. adj. [from splen.] Kind; gentle; mild.
Mean time flew our ships, and freight we fetcht
The fyren's isle; a spl'entful wind to stretch
Her wings to wait us, and so urg'd our keel.
SPLE'NWORD. n. f. [from splen and word.] A plant.
The leaves and fruit are like those of the fern; but the pinnule are eared at their basis.
Safe pass'd the gnome through this fantastick band,
A branch of healing spl'entword in his hand.
SPLE'NY. adj. [from splen.] Angry; peevish.
What though I know her virtuous,
And well deserving; yet I know her for A spl'ent Lutheran, and not wholesome to Our cause.
SPLE'NDENT. adj. [from splendens, Latin.] Shining; glossy; having lustre.
They assigned them names from some remarkable qualities, that is very observable in their red and splendens planets.
Metallick substances may, by reason of their great density, reflect all the light incident upon them, and so be as opaque and splendens as it's possible for any body to be.
SPLE'NDID. adj. [from splendide, Fr. splendens, Latin.] Showy; magnificent; sumptuous; pompous.
Unacceptable, though in heav'n, our state
Of splendide vassalage.
Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And slept beneath the pompous colonade:
Fast by his side Piliatras lay spread,
In age his equal, on a splendide bed.
SPLE'NDIDLY. adv. [from splendide.] Magnificently; sumptuously; pompously.
Their condition, though it look splendide, yet when you handle it on all sides, it will prick your fingers.
You will not admit you live splendide, yet it cannot be denied but that you live neatly and elegantly.
How he lives and eats,
How largely gives, how splendide he treats.
He, of the royal store
Splendide frugal, fits whole nights devoid
Of sweet repose.
SPLE'NDOUR. n. f. [from splendour, French; splendens, Latin.]
1. Lustre; power of shining.
Splendour hath a degree of whiteness, especially if there be a little repercussion; for a looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple.
The dignity of gold above silver is not much; the splendour is alike, and more pleasing to some eyes, as in cloth of silver.
The first symptoms are a chiliness, a certain splendour or shining in the eyes, with a little moisture.
2. Magnificence; pomp.
Romulus, being to give laws to his new Romans, found no better way to procure an esteem and reverence to them, than by first procuring it to himself by splendour of habit and retinue.
'Tis use alone that sanctifies expence,
And splendour borrows all her rays from sense.
SPLE'NETICK. adj. [from splenetique, French.] Troubled with the spleen; fretful; peevish.
Horace purged himself from these splenetick reflections in odes and epodes, before he undertook his satyrs.
This daughter silently lowers, t'other steals a kind look at you, a third is exactly well behaved, and a fourth a splenetick.
You humour me when I am sick;
Why not when I am splenetick?
SPLE'NIQUE. adj. [from splénique, French; splén, Latin.] Belonging to the spleen.
Suppose the spleen obstructed in its lower parts, and splénick anch, a potent heat causeth the organismus to boil.
The splénick vein hath divers cells opening into it near its extremities in human bodies; but in quadrupeds the cells open into the trunks of the splénick veins.
SPLE'NTISH. adj. [from splen.] Fretful; peevish.
Yourself you must engage,
Somewhat to cool your splénish rage;
Your grievous thirst, and to allwage,
That first you drink this liquor.

SPL

SPLENITIVE. adj. [from splen.] Hot; fiery; passionate. Not in use.
Take thy fingers from my throat;
For though I am not splenitive and rash,
Yet I have in me something dangerous.
SPL'ENT. n. f. [Or perhaps splint; spinella, Italian.]
Spl'ent is a callous hard substance, or an insensible swelling, which breeds on or adheres to the shank-bone, and when it grows big spoils the shape of the leg. When there is but one, it is called a single splint; but when there is another opposite to it on the outside of the shank-bone, it is called a pegged or pinned splint.
To SPLICE. v. a. [from splicen, Dutch; splice, Latin.] To join the two ends of a rope without a knot.
SPLINT. n. f. [from splinter, Dutch.] A thin piece of wood or other matter used by chirurgeons to hold the bone newly set in its place.
The ancients, after the seventh day, used splinters, which not only kept the members steady, but straight; and of these some are made of tin, others of scabbard and wood, sowed up in linen cloths.
To SPLINT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To secure by splinters.
This broken joint intreat her to splint, and this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.
2. To shiver; to break into fragments.
SPLINTER. n. f. [from splinter, Dutch.]
1. A fragment of any thing broken with violence.
He was slain upon a course at tilt, one of the splinters of Montgomery's staff going in at his bever.
Amidst whole heaps of spices lights a ball,
And now their odours arm'd against them flie;
Some preciously by shatter'd porcelain fall,
And some by aromatic splinters die.
2. A thin piece of wood.
A plain Indian fan, used by the meaner sort, made of the small stringy parts of roots, spread out in a round flat form, and so bound together with a splinter hoops, and strengthened with small bars on both sides.
To SPLINTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To be broken into fragments.
To SPLIFY. v. a. pret. splifit. [from splinter, Dutch.]
1. To cleave; to rive; to divide longitudinally in two.
Do't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do't not, thou splifit thine own.
Mine own tongue splifits what it speaks,
That self-hand
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
Splifit the heart.
Wert thou serv'd up to one dish, the rather
To splifit thy fire into a double father?
When cold Winter splifit the rocks in twain,
He dript the beardsfoot of its leafy growth.
A skull so hard, that it is almost as easy to splifit a helmet of iron as to make a fracture in it.
This effort is in some earthquakes so vehement, that it splifits and tears the earth, making cracks or chasms in it some miles.
2. To divide; to part.
Their logic has appeared the mere art of wrangling, and their metaphysics the skill of splifiting an hair, of distinguishing without a difference.
One and the same ray is by refraction disturbed, shattered, diluted, and splifit, and spread into many diverging rays.
He intances Luther's sensuality and disobedience; two crimes which he has dealt with, and to make the more solemn shew he splifit 'em into twenty.
Oh, would it please the gods to splifit
Thy beauty, size, and years, and wit,
No age could furnish out a pair
Of nymphs so graceful, wise, and fair;
With half the lustre of your eyes,
With half your wit, your years, and size.
3. To dash and break on a rock.
God's desertion, as a full and violent wind, drives him in an instant, not to the harbours, but on the rock where he will be irrecoverably splifit.
Those who live by shores, with joy behold
Some wealthy vessel splifit or stranded high;
And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd gold,
And seek the tempests which the others fly.
4. To divide; to break into discord.
In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power splifits their councils, and finies their most refined policies with frustration and a curse.
To SPLIT. v. n.
1. To burst in sunder; to crack; to suffer disruption.
A huge vessel of exceeding hard marble splifit asunder by con-gealed water.
What is't to me,
Who never fall on her unfaithful sea,

SPO

If storms arise and clouds grow black,
If the malt splifits, and threaten wrack?
The road that to the lungs this store transmits,
Into unnumber'd narrow channels splifits.
Each had a gravity would make you splifit,
And shook his head at M—y as a wit.
2. To be broken against rocks.
After our ship did splifit,
When you, and the poor number fav'd with you,
Hung on our driving boat.
These are the rocks on which the sanguine tribe of lovers daily splifit, and on which the politician, the alchymist, and projector are cast away.
The seamen spied a rock, and the wind was so strong that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately splifit.
SPL'ITTER. n. f. [from splifit.] One who splifits.
How should we rejoice, if, like Judas the first,
Those splitters of parsons in sunder should burst!
SPLUTTER. n. f. Buffle; tumult. A low word.
To SPOIL. v. a. [from spolio, Latin; spolier, French.]
1. To rob; to take away by force.
Ye took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven an enduring substance.
This mount
With all his verdure spoilt, and trees adrift.
2. To plunder; to strip of goods.
Yielding themselves upon the Turks faith, for the safeguard of their liberty and goods, they were most injuriously spoiled of all that they had.
Thou shalt not gain what I deny to yield,
Nor reap the harvest, though thou spoilt the field.
My sons their old unhappy fire despise,
Spoilt of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes.
3. To corrupt; to mar; to make useless. [This is properly spoil, spilian, Saxon.]
Beware lest any man spoil you, through philosophy and vain deceit.
Spiritual pride spoils many graces.
To SPOIL. v. n.
1. To practice robbery or plunder.
England was infested with robbers and outlaws, which, lurking in woods, used often to break forth to rob and spoil.
They which hate us spoil for themselves.
2. To grow useless; to be corrupted.
He that gathered a hundred bushels of acorns, or apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoiled, else he robbed others.
SPOIL. n. f. [from spolio, Latin.]
1. That which is taken by violence; that which is taken from an enemy; plunder; pillage; booty.
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name.
Where the cleaver chops the heifer's spoils,
Thy breathing nostril hold.
2. The act of robbery; robbery; waste.
The man that hath not music in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils.
Go and speed!
Havock, and spoil, and ruin are my gain.
3. Corruption; cause of corruption.
Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.
4. The slough; the cast-off skin of a serpent.
Snakes, the rather for the casting of their spoil, live till they be old.
SPOILER. n. f. [from spoil.]
1. A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.
Such ruin of her manners Rome
Doth suffer now, as she's become Both her own spoiler and own prey.
Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places.
Came you, then, here, thus far, thro' waves, to conquer,
To waste, to plunder, out of meek compassion?
Is it humanity that prompts you on?
Happy for us, and happy for you spoilers,
Had your humanity ne'er reach'd our world!
2. One who mars or corrupts any thing.
SPOILFUL. adj. [from spoil and full.] Wasteful; rapacious.
Having oft in battle vanquished
Those spoilful Picts, and swarming Easterlings, Long time in peace his realm established.
SPOKE. n. f. [from spaca, Saxon; spoke, German.] The bar of a wheel that passes from the nave to the felly.
All you gods,
In general synod take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellyes of her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n.

SPO

No heir e'er drove to fine a coach;
The spokes, we are by Ovid told,
Were silver, and the axle gold. Swift.
SPOKE. The preterite of spoke. Swift.
They spoke best in the glory of their conquest. Sprat.
SPOKEN. Participle passive of spoke.
Wouldst thou be spoken for to the king? 2 Kings iv. 13.
The original of these signs for communication is found in viva voce, in spoken language. Holder's Elements of Speech.
SPOKESMAN. n. f. [spoke and man.] One who speaks for another.
'Tis you that have the reason.
—To do what?
—To be a spokesman from madam Silvia: Shakespeare.
He shall be thy spokesman unto the people. Ex. iv. 16.
To SPOULATE. v. a. [spolio, Lat.] To rob; to plunder. Diſt.
SPOILATION. n. f. [spoliation, French; spoliatio, Latin.] The act of robbery or privation.
An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure & facto, and sometimes de facto, and not de jure; as when a man suffers a spoliation by his own act. Ayliffe's Parergon.
SPONDÉE. n. f. [spondée, French; spendee, Latin.] A foot of two long syllables.
We see in the choice of the words the weight of the stone, and the striving to heave it up the mountain: Homer clogs the verse with spondees, and leaves the vowels open. Broom.
SPONDYLE. n. f. [σπονδυλῆς; spandile, Fr. spandylus, Latin.]
A vertebra; a joint of the spine.
It hath for the spine or back-bone a cartilaginous substance, without any spondyles, processes, or protuberances. Brown.
SPONGE. n. f. [spongia, Latin.] A soft porous substance supposed by some the nidus of animals. It is remarkable for sucking up water.
Sponges are gathered from the sides of rocks, being as a large but tough moss. Bacon.
They opened and washed part of their sponges. Sandys.
Great officers are like sponges: they suck 'till they are full, and, when they come once to be squeezed, their very heart's blood come away. L'Estrange.
To SPONGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To blot; to wipe away
as with a sponge.
Except between the words of translation and the mind of Scripture itself there be contradiction, very little difference should not seem an intolerable blemish necessarily to be sponged out. Hooker.
To SPONGE. v. n. To suck in as a sponge; to gain by mean arts.
The ant lives upon her own honesty; whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smell-feast, that sponges upon other people's trenchers. L'Estrange.
Here went the dean, when he's to feck,
To sponge a breakfast once a week. Swift.
SPONGER. n. f. [from sponge.] One who hangs for a maintenance on others.
A generous rich man, that kept a splendid and open table, would try which were friends, and which only trencher-flies and spongers. L'Estrange.
SPONGINESS. n. f. [from sponge.] Softness and fulness of cavities like a sponge.
The lungs are exposed to receive all the droppings from the brain: a very fit cistern, because of their sponginess. Harvey.
SPONGIOUS. adj. [spongiosus, French; from sponge.] Full of small cavities like a sponge.
All thick bones are hollow or spongy, and contain an oleaginous substance in little vesicles, which by the heat of the body is exhaled through these bones to supply their fibres. Chey.
SPONGY. adj. [from sponge.]
1. Soft and full of small interstitial holes.
The lungs are the most spongy part of the body, and therefore ablest to contract and dilate itself. Bacon's Nat. History.
A spongy excrecence growth upon the roots of the lafer-tree, and upon cedar, very white, light, and friable, called agarick. Bacon's Natural History.
The body of the tree being very spongy within, though hard without, they easily contrive into canoes. More.
Into earth's spongy veins the ocean sinks,
Those rivers to replenish which he drinks. Denham.
Return, unhappy swain!
The spongy clouds are fill'd with gath'ring rain. Dryden.
Her bones are all very spongy, and more remarkably those of a wild bird, which flies much, and long together. Grew.
2. Wet; drenched; soaked; full like a sponge.
When their drenched natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan? What not put upon His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt. Shakespeare.
SPONK. n. f. A word in Edinburgh which denotes a match, or any thing dipt in sulphur that takes fire: as, any sponks will ye buy? Touchwood.
SPONSAL. adj. [sponsalis, Latin.] Relating to marriage.
SPONSION. n. f. [sponsio, Latin.] The act of becoming surety for another.

SPO

SPONSOR. n. f. [Latin.] A surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another.
In the baptism of a male there ought to be two males and one woman, and in the baptism of a female child two women and one man; and these are called sponsors or sureties for their education in the true Christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.
The sponsor ought to be of the same station with the person to whom he becomes surety. liton.
SPONTANEITY. n. f. [spontaneitas, school Lat. spontaneus, Fr.
from spontaneus.] Voluntaryness; willingness; accord un-compelled.
Necessity and spontaneity may sometimes meet together, so may spontaneity and liberty; but real necessity and true liberty can never. Bramb. against Hobbs.
Strict necessity they fimple call;
It so binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontaneity not choice are done. Dryden.
SPONTANEOUS. adj. [spontaneus, French; from sponte, Lat.]
Voluntary; not compelled; acting without compulsion or restraint; acting of itself; acting of its own accord.
Many analogical motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous; I have reason to conclude, that these are not simply mechanical. Hale.
They now came forth
Spontaneous; for within them spirit mov'd Attendant on their lord. Milton.
While John for nine-pins does declare,
And Roger loves to pitch the bar,
Both legs and arms spontaneous move,
Which was the thing I meant to prove. Prior.
Begin with fence, of ev'ry art the soul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance,
Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow. Pope.
SPONTANEOUSLY. adv. [from spontaneous.] Voluntarily; of its own accord.
This would be as impossible as that the lead of an edifice should naturally and spontaneously mount up to the roof, while lighter materials employ themselves beneath it. Bentley.
They turn spontaneously acid, and the curd into cheese as hard as a stone. Arbutnot on Animals.
SPONTANEOUSNESS. n. f. [from spontaneous.] Voluntaryness;
freedom of will; accord unforced.
The sagacities and instincts of brutes, the spontaneousness of many of their animal motions, are not explicable without supposing some active determinate power connected to and inherent in their spirits, of a higher extraction than the bare natural modification of matter. Hale's Origin of Animals.
SPOOL. n. f. [spool, German; spool, Dutch.] A small piece of cane or reed, with a knot at each end; or a piece of wood turned in that form to wind yarn upon; a quill.
To SPOOL. v. n. [Probably from spume, or foam, as a ship driven with violence spumes, or raises a foam.]
When virtue spooms before a prosperous gale,
My heaving wishes help to fill the sail. Dryden.
SPOON. n. f. [spoon, Dutch; spone, Danish; spoon, Islandic.]
A concave vessel with a handle, used in eating liquids.
Wouldst thou drown thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.
This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no long spoon. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dine exact at noon. Pope.
SPOONBILL. n. f. [spoon and bill.] A bird.
The shoveller, or spoonbill; the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel; but not concave like a spoon, but perfectly flat. Grew's Museum.
Ducks and geese have such long broad bills to quaffer in water and mud; to which we may reckon the bill of the spoonbill. Derham's Physico-Theology.
SPOONFUL. n. f. [spoon and full.]
1. As much as is generally taken at once in a spoon. A medical spoonful is half an ounce.
Prescribe him, before he do use the receipt, that he take such a pill, or a spoonful of liquor. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. Any small quantity of liquid.
Surely the choice and measure of the materials of which the whole body is composed, and what we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as of what we take feldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls. Arbutnot.
SPOONMEAT. n. f. [spoon and meat.] Liquid food; nourishment taken with a spoon.
We prescribed a slender diet, allowing only spoonmeats. Wife.
Wretched
Are mortals born to sleep their lives away!
Go back to what thy infancy began,
Eat pap and spoonmeat; for thy eguags cry,
Be fullen, and refuse the lullaby. Dryden's Pers.

SPO

Diet most upon spoonmeats, as veal, or cock-broths. Harv.

lar season affects but few people. Arbutnot.
SPORT. n. f. [spott, a make-game, Islandic.]
1. Play; diversion; game; frolic and tumultuous merriment.
Her sports were such as carried riches of knowledge upon the stream of delight. Sidney.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest. Shakespeare.
When their hearts were merry, they said, call for Samson, that he may make us sports; and they called for him, and he made them sport. Judg. xvi. 25.
As a mad-man who casteth fire-brands, arrows and death;
so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and faith, am not
I in sport? Prov. xxvi. 19.
The discourse of fools is irksome, and their sport is in the wantonness of sin. Ecclus xxvii. 13.
2. Mock; contemptuous mirth.
They had his merriments in derision and made a sport of his prophesies. 1 Esdr. i. 51.
To make sport with his word, and to endeavour to render it ridiculous, by turning that holy book into rallery, is a direct affront to God. Tillotson's Sermons.
3. That with which one plays.
Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey
Of wrecking whirlwinds. Milton.
Commit not thy prophetick mind
To fitting leaves, the sport of every wind, Left they disperse in air. Dryden.
4. Play; idle gingle.
An author who should introduce such a sport of words upon our stage, would meet with small applause. Broom.
5. Diversion of the field, as of fowling, hunting, fishing.
Now for our mountain sport, up to yon hill,
Your legs are young. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, and the sports of the field, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer, between Richmond and Hampton court. Clarendon.
To SPORT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To divert; to make merry.
The poor man wept and bled, cried and prayed, while they sport themselves in his pain, and delighted in his prayers as the argument of their victory. Sidney.
Away with him, and let her sport herself
With that she's big with. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Isa. lvi. 4.
What pretty stories these are for a man of his seriousness to sport himself withal! Atterbury.
Let such writers go on at their dearest peril, and sport themselves in their own deceivings. Watts.
2. To represent by any kind of play.
Now sporting on thy lyre the love of youth,
Now virtuous age and venerable truth;
Expressing justly Sappho's wanton art
Of odes, and Pindar's more majestic part. Dryden.
To SPORT. v. n.
1. To play; to frolic; to game; to wanton.
They sporting with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats dropt with gold. Milton.
Larissa, as the sported at this play, was drowned in the river Peneus. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
2. To trifle.
If any man turn religion into rallery, by bold jests, he renders himself ridiculous, because he sports with his own life. Tillotson.
SPORTFUL. adj. [sport and full.] Merry; frolic; wanton;
ludicrous; done in jest.
How with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge. Shakespeare.
His highness, even in such a slight and sportful damage, had a noble sense of just dealing. Wotton.
Down he alights among the sportful herd
Of those four-footed kinds. Milton.
Behold your own Africanus, while he said,
He drew his glittering helmet from his head,
In which the youth to sportful arms he led. Dryden.
They are no sportful productions of the soil, but did once belong to real and living fishes; seeing each of them doth exactly resemble some other shell on the sea shore. Bentley.
A catalogue of this may be had in Albericus Gentilis; which,
because it is too sportful, I forbear to mention. Baker.
SPORTFULLY. adv. [from sportful.] Wantonly; merrily.
SPORTFULNESS. n. f. [from sportful.] Wantonness; play;
merriment; frolic.

SPO

the ladies lost the further marking of his sportfulness. Sidney.
SPORTIVE. adj. [from sport.] Gay; merry; frolic; wanton; playful; ludicrous.
I am not in a sportive humour now;
Tell me, and dally not, where is the money? Shakespeare.
Is it I
That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky mullets? Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
While thus the constant pair alternate said,
Joyful above them and around them play'd
Angels and sportive loves, a numerous crowd, Smiling they clapt their wings, and low they bow'd. Prior.
We must not hope wholly to change their original tempers, nor make the gay, penfive and grave; nor the melancholy, sportive, without spoiling them. Locke.
No wonder savages or subjects slain,
Were equal crimes in a despotick reign;
Both doom'd alike for sportive tyrants bled,
But subjects starv'd while savages were fed. Pope.
SPORTIVENESS. n. f. [from sportive.] Gaiety; play; wantonness.
Shall I conclude her to be simple, that has her time to begin, or refuse sportiveness as freely as I have? Walton's Angler.
SPORTSMAN. n. f. [sport and man.] One who pursues the recreations of the field.
Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron, as the Christians have their St. Hubert: he speaks of the constellation which makes a good sportsman. Addison.
SPORTULE. n. f. [sportule, French; sportula, Latin.] An alms;
a dole.
The bishops, who consecrated the ground, had a spill or sportule from the credulous laity. Ayliffe's Parergon.
SPOUT. n. f. [spette, Danish; spette, Flemish.]
1. A blot; a mark made by discoloration.
This three years day, these eyes, though clear
To outward view of blemish or of spot,
Bereft of sight, their seeing have forgot.
A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with advantage; but if he any way degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.
2. A taint; a disgrace; a reproach.
3. I know not well the meaning of spot in this place, unless it be a scandalous woman; a disgrace to her sex.
Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians;
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
4. A small extent of place.
That spot to which I point is paradise,
Adam's abode, those lofty shades his bow'r. Milton.
He, who with Plato, shall place beatitude in the knowledge of God, will have his thoughts raised to other contemplations than those who looked not beyond this spot of earth, and those perishing things in it. Locke.
About one of these breathing passages is a spot of myrtles, that flourish within the steam of these vapours. Addison.
Abdallah converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers. The Guardian.
He that could make two ears of corn grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind than the whole race of politicians. Gulliver.
5. Any particular place.
I would be busy in the world, and learn,
Not like a coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow. Otway.
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
So the my prey becomes ev'n here.
Here Adrian fell: upon that fatal spot
Our brother died. Granville.
6. Upon the SPOT. Immediately; without changing place.
[Sur le champ.]
The lion did not chop him up immediately upon the spot;
and yet he was resolved he should not escape. L'Estrange.

They are polluted off rings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. Shakespeare.
Have you not seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries in your wife's hand? Shakespeare.
But serpents now more amity maintain;
From spotted skins the leopard does refrain:
No weaker lion's by a stronger slain. Tate's Juvenal.
I counted the patches on both sides, and found the tory patches to be about twenty stronger than the whig; but next morning the whole puppet-show was filled with faces spotted after the whiggish manner. Addison's Spectator.

SPO

2. To corrupt; to disgrace; to taint.
This vow receive, this vow of God's maintain.
My virgin life, no spotted thoughts shall stain.

many absurdities. Abbot's Description of the World.
SPOTLESS. adj. [from spot.]
1. Free from spots.
2. Free from reproach or impurity; immaculate; pure; untainted.
So much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth. Shakespeare.
I dare my life lay down, that the queen is spotless.
In thy eyes of heaven. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
You grac'd the several parts of life,
A spotless virgin, and a faultless wife. Waller.
We sometimes wish that it had been our lot to live and converse with Christ, to hear his divine discourses, and to observe his spotless behaviour; and we please ourselves perhaps with thinking, how ready a reception we should have given to him and his doctrine. Atterbury.
Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind,
Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd. Pope.
SPOTTER. n. s. [from spot.] One that spots; one that maculates.
SPOTTY. adj. [from spot.] Full of spots; maculated.

Rivers or mountains on her pearly globe. Milton.
SPOUSAL. adj. [from spouse.] Nuptial; matrimonial; conjugal; connubial; bridal.
There shall we consummate our spousal rites. Shakespeare.
Hope's chaff kifs wrongs no more joy's maidenhead,
Than spousal rites prejudice the marriage bed. Grayhaw.
This other in her prime of love,
Spousal embraces vitiated with gold. Milton.
Sleep it thou, careless of the nuptial day?
Thy spousal ornament neglected lies;
Arise, prepare the bridal train, arise. Pope's Odyssey.
SPOUSAL. n. s. [from spouse, Fr. spousalia, Latin.] Marriage;
nuptials.
As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league. Shakespeare.
The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening star,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen.
Ethereal music did her death prepare,
Like joyful sounds of spousals in the air.
A radiant light did her crown'd temples gild. Dryden.
SPOUSE. n. s. [from spousus, Latin; spouse, French.] One joined in marriage; a husband or wife.

lungs, an ejection thereof is contrived by a filula or spout at the head. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If you chance it to lack,
Be it claret or sack,
I'll make this shout
To deal it about,
Or this to run out,
As it were from a spout. Ben. Johnson.
As waters did in storms, now pitch runs out,
As lead, when a fir'd church becomes one spout. Donne.
In Gaza they couch vessels of earth in their walls to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon.
Let the water be fed by some higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fair spouts, and then discharged by some equality of bores that it stay little. Bacon.

SPR

- In this single cathedral the very spouts are loaded with ornaments.
From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
And China's earth receives the smoking tide.
2. Water falling in a body; a cataract, such as is seen in the hot climates when clouds sometimes discharge all their water at once.
Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Confin'd in mists by the almighty kin,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear,
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomedes. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
The force of these motions pressing more in some places than in others, there would fall not showers, but great spouts of cascades of water. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
To SPOUT. v. a. [from the noun.] To pour with violence, or in a collected body as from a spout.
We will bear home that luffy blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town. Shakespeare.

The sudden turn may stretch the swelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unhinge, or ancle sprain. Gay.
SPRAIN. n. s. [from the verb.] Extension of ligaments without dislocation of the joint.
I was in pain, and thought it was with some sprain at tennis.
SPRAINTS. n. s. The dung of an otter. Temple.
SPRANG. The preterite of spring.
Mankind sprang from one common original; whence this tradition would be universally diffused. Tilley.
SPRAT. n. s. [from spat, Dutch.] A small sea fish.
So oft in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brings. Sidney.
All-faints do lay for porke and fowle,
For sprats and sprutlings for their house. Spenser.
Of round fish there are brit, sprat, barn, smelts. Cowley.
To SPRAWL. v. n. [from spardle, Danish; spartelen, Dutch.]
1. To thruggle as in the convulsions of death.
Hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A fight to vex the father's soul. Shakespeare.
Some lie sprawling on the ground,
With many a gasp and bloody wound. Hudibras.
2. To tumble with agitation and contortion of the limbs.
The birds were not fledged; but upon sprawling, and thrug-gling to get clear of the flame, down they tumbled. L'Estrange.
Telamon hap'd to meet
A rising root that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.
Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl. Prior.
Did the stars do this feat once only, which gave beginning to human race? who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their miracles, as they sprawled out of ditches?
He ran, he leapt into a flood,
There sprawl'd a while, and scarce got out;
All cover'd o'er with slime. Swift.
SERAY. n. s. [Of the same race with sprit and spout.]
1. The extremity of a branch.
At sight whereof each bird that sits on sprays,
And every beast that to his den was fled,
Come forth afresh out of their late dismay,
And to the light lift up their drooping head. Hubbard's Tale.
Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays,
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days. Shakespeare.
In hewing Rutland, when his leaves put forth,
Clifford set his murrin ring knife to the roots,
From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring. Shakespeare.
The wind that whistles through the sprays,
Maintains the comfort of the song;
And hidden birds with native lays,
The golden sleep prolong. Dryden.

SPR

2. The foam of the sea, commonly written spry. Arvalmet.
Winds raise some of the salt with the spray. Dutch.
To SPREAD. v. a. [from spereban, Saxon; sprijden, Dutch.]
1. To extend; to expand; to make to cover or fill a larger space than before.
He bought a field where he had spread his tent. Gen. xxxiii.
Rizpah spread sackcloth for her upon the rock. 2 Sam. xxi.
Make the trees more tall, more spread, and more hasty than they use to be. Bacon's Natural History.
Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarrhish. Jer. x.
2. To cover by extension.
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Grayville.
3. To cover over.
The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold. Ija. xl. 19.
4. To stretch; to extend.
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair. Shakespeare.
He arose from kneeling, with his hands spread up to heaven, and he blessed the congregation. 1 King. viii. 54.
The stately trees fast spread their branches. Milton.
Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
Fast by his side Piffistratus lay spread,
In age his equal, on a splendid bed. Pope.
5. To publish; to divulge; to disseminate.
They, when departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country. Math. ix. 31.
6. To emit as effluvia or emanations; to diffuse.
Their course thro' thickest constellations held,
They spread their bane. Milton.
To SPREAD. v. n. To extend or expand itself.
Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle? Job xxxvi. 29.
The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension only of their spreading and ambitious designs. Bacon.
Plants, if they spread much, are seldom tall.
Great Pan, who wont to chase the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there. Addison's Cato.
The valley opened at the farther end spreading forth into an immense ocean. Addison.
SPREAD. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Extent; compass.
I have got a fine spread of improvable lands, and am already ploughing up some, fencing others. Addison.
2. Expansion of parts.
No flower hath that spread of the woodbind. Bacon.
SPREADER. n. s. [from spread.]
1. One that spreads.
By conforming ourselves we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from Papists by our conformity with them in ceremonies. Hoeber.
2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.
If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news. Swift.
SPRINT. part. [from sprint, to sprinkle, sprenzen, sprennen, Saxon; sprenzen, Dutch.] Sprinkled. Obsolete.
O lips, that kiss'd that hand, with my tears spent. Sidney.
SPRIG. n. s. [from spring, Welsh; to Davies; but it is probably of the same race with spring.] A small branch; a spray.
The substance is true ivy, after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some sprig to keep. Bacon.
Our chilling climate hardly bears
A sprig of bays in fifty years;
While ev'ry fool his claim alledges,
As if it grew in common hedges. Swift.
SPRIG. Chrystal. n. s.
In perpendicular fissures, chrysal is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other lessening gradually, till it terminates in a point:
this is called by lapidaries sprig or rock chrysal. Woodward.
SPRIGGY. adj. [from sprig.] Full of small branches.
SPRIGGHT. n. s. [Contraction of sprit, spiritus, Latin: it was anciently written sprete or spryte, and sprit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives sprightly, sprightful; but custom has determined otherwise.]
1. Sprit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.
She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words to wife do make their way,
To bear the message of her spright. Spenser.
Forth he called out of deep darkness dread,
Legions of sprights, the which like little flies,
Flut'ring about his ever dammed head,
Await whereto their service he applies.
While with heav'nly charity he spoke,
A dreaming blaze the silent shadows broke;
The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,
And gaping graves received the guilty spright.
Of these am I who thy protection claim,
A watchful sprite. Pope.

SPR

2. Walking spirit; apparition.
The ideas of goblins and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.
3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.
O chastity, the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights:
To only thee my constant course I bear,
Till spotless soul unto thy bosom fly,
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.
4. An arrow.
We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon's Natural History.
To SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a spright. A ludicrous use.
I am sprighted with a fool. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
SPRIGHTEFUL. adj. [from spright and full.] Lively; brisk; gay; vigorous.
The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.—
Spoke like a sprightly noble gentleman. Shakespeare.
Happy my eyes when they behold thy face:
My heavy heart will leave its doleful beating,
At sight of thee, and bound with sprightly joys. Otway.
SPRIGHTEFULLY. adv. [from sprightly.] Briskly; vigorously.
Norfolk, sprightly and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet. Shakespeare.
SPRIGHTLINESS. n. s. [from sprightly.] Liveliness; briskness;
vigour; gaiety; vivacity.
The soul is clogged when she acts in conjunction with a companion so heavy; but in dreams, observe with what a sprightliness and alacrity does she exert herself. Addison.
SPRIGHTLY. adj. [from spright.] Gay; brisk; lively; vigorous; airy; vivacious.
Produce the wine that makes us bold,
And sprightly wit and love inspires. Dryden.
When now the sprightly trumpet, from afar,
Had giv'n the signal of approaching war.
Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay:
Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladdome day. Prior.
The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green;
She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen. Pope.
To SPRING. v. n. Preterite spring or sprang, anciently sprung.
[springan, Sax. springen, Dutch.]
1. To arise out of the ground and grow by vegetative power.
All blest secrets,
All you unpublisch'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shakespeare.
To his mulick, plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth. Job xxxviii. 27.
Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up and encreased. Mark iv. 8.
Tell me, in what happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope.
2. To begin to grow.
That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not sprung, are effects of providence. Ray.
3. To proceed as from seed.
Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves;
and in the second year that which springeth of the same. 2 Kings.
Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton.
4. To come into existence; to issue forth.
Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies. Shakespeare.
Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,
And each warm with springs mutual from the heart. Pope.
5. To arise; to appear.
When the day began to spring, they let her go. Judges.
To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up. Matth. iv. 16.
6. To issue with effect or force.
Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn;
Oh spring to light: auspicious babe be born. Pope.
7. To proceed as from ancestors.
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued; and what stock he springs of;
The noble house of Marcus. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Our Lord sprang out of Judea. Heb. vii. 14.
All these
Shall, like the brethren spring of dragon's teeth,
Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em.
Heroes of old, by rapine, and by spoil,
In search of fame did all the world embroil;
Thus

- Thus to their gods, each then ally'd his name,
This spring from Jove, and that from Titan came. Grav.
8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.
They found new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton.
Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, spring from the same original, and were to defend by the same rules. Locke.
- Do not blast my springing hopes Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Roue.
9. To grow; to thrive.
What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring:
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
10. To bound; to leap; to jump.
Some strange commotion
Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; strait
Spring out into fast gait, then stops again. Shak. H. VIII.
I spring not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shak.
He called for a light, and spring in and fell before Paul. Ats.
When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again;
Then spring the forth, they follow'd her again. Dryden.
Afraid to sleep;
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap
She spring from bed. Dryden.
Nor lies she long; but as her fates ordain,
Spring up to life, and fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.
See, aw'd by heaven, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;
And springing from her disappointed arms,
Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Blackmore.
The mountain flag, that *spring*s
From height to height, and bounds along the plains,
Nor has a master to restrain his course;
That mountain flag would Vanoe rather be,
Than be a slave. Philips's Briton.
11. To fly with elastic power.
A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the stick that *spring*s. Mortimer's Husbandry.
12. To rise from a covert.
My doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Otway.
A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.
13. To issue from a fountain.
Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water. Gen. xxvi. 19.
Let the wide world his praises sing,
Where Tagus and Euphrates spring;
And from the Danube's frothy banks to those Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Recomm.
14. To proceed as from a source.
Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: 'tis for you
To sit and scoule upon night's heavy brow. Crashaw.
15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.
Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
Spring thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright:
The pow'r, behold! the pow'r in glory thone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.
The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd,
The fleet swift tilting o'er the furies flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appeared. Pope.
- To SPRING, v. a.
1. To start; to rouse game.
Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose:
Now negligent of sport I lie;
And now, as other fawknars use,
I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and dye,
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Donne.
That spring the game you were to set,
Before you had time to draw the net. Hudibras.
A large cock-pheasant he spring in one of the neighbouring woods. Addison's Spectator.
Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character,
I am cross'd by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.
See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
The scent grows warm; he stops, he *spring*s; the prey. Gay.
2. To produce to light.
The nurse, surpriz'd with fright,
Starts and leaves her bed, and *spring*s a light. Dryden.

- Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more;
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heaven, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy light,
And reason saw not, till faith spring the light. Dryden.
He that has such a burning zeal, and *spring*s such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Collier.
3. To make by starting a plank.
People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has spring a leak. L'Estrange.
No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time:
Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou *spring*st a leak already in thy crown. Dryden.
Whether the spring a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overfet with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.
4. To discharge a mine.
Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have spring divers others which did little execution. Tatler.
I spring a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison's Spectator.
5. To contrive as a sudden expedient; to offer unexpectedly.
The friends to the cause spring a new project, and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear 'till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the pretender. Swift.
6. To produce hastily.
7. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.
Unbecoming skill
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.
- SPRING*, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The season in which plants spring and vegetate; the vernal season.
Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick, plants and flowers
Ever spring, as fun and flowers
There had made a lasting Spring. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
The Spring vilieth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carver.
Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson's Spring.
2. An elastic body; a body which when distorted has the power of restoring itself to its former state.
This may be better performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wheels.
The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chape of the vice open. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
He that was sharp sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastic motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.
3. Elastic force.
Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryd.
Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest, unless they be elastic, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.
The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring which is weakened, when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.
In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbuthnot.
4. Any active power; any cause by which motion is produced or propagated.
My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the *spring*s of life;
So much the name of father awes me still.
Nature is the same, and man is the same; has the same affections and passions, and the same *spring*s; that give them motion. Swift.
Our author thuns by vulgar *spring*s to move
The hero's glory, or the virgin's love. Pope's Prel. to Cat.
5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.
The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke:
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.
With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground! Add. Cat.

6. A leak; a start of plank.
Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents; how to shift his sails,
Where her *spring*s are, her leaks, and how to stop 'em. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.
Now stop thy *spring*s; my sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb. Shaksp. H. VI.
*Spring*s on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
When in th' effects she doth the caules know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise;
And seeing the branch, conceives the root below:
These things she views without the body's eyes. Davies.
He adds the running *spring*s and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes. Dryden.
Nile hears him knocking at his sevenfold gates,
And focks his hidden spring, and fears his neplews fates. Dry.
He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of Winter. Locke.
The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in *spring*s, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Locke.
8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.
To that great spring, whence right and honour streams;
The sacred *spring*s, whence right and honour streams;
Distilling virtue, shedding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams.
I move, I see, I speak, discourse, and know,
Though now I am, I was not always so:
Then that from which I was, must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore. Dryden.
Rolling down through so many barbarous ages, from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.
He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. Bentley.
9. Rife; beginning.
About the spring of the day Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. 1 Sa. ix. 26.
10. Course; original.
The first *spring*s of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little.
SPRING, adv. [from the noun.] With elastic vigour.
Before the bull the pictur'd winged love,
With his young brother sport, light fluttering
Upon the waves, as each had been a dove;
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring
A burning tend about his head did move,
As in their fire's new love both triumphing. Spenser.
- SPRINGAL*, n. f. A youth.
SPRINGE, n. f. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which fastened to any elastic body catches by a spring or jerk.
As a woodcock to my own *spring*s, Offick,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Let goats for food their loaded udders lend;
But neither *spring*s, nets, nor snares employ. Dryden.
With hairy *spring*s we the birds betray,
Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.
- SPRINGING*, n. f. [from spring.] One who rouses game.
SPRINGINESS, n. f. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.
Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow, since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.
The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.
- SPRINGHALT*, n. f. [from spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.
They've all new legs, and lame ones; one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the spavin And springhalt reign'd among them. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
- SPRINGTIDE*, n. f. [from spring and tide.] Tide at the new moon;
high tide.
Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does less supply,
'Till they quite shrink in again:
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but rain, and runs not clear. Dryd. Tyrannick Love.
Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide. Gray's Cismol.
- SPRINGLE*, n. f. [from spring.] A springle; an elastic noose.
Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plush-shoot loveth for springles to take them. Carew.
- To SPRINGLE, v. n. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle.

- This is Timon's last,
Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries,
Washes it off, and springles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
- SPRINGY*, adj. [from spring.]
1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself.
Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road;
While the tir'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein. Blackm. Creation.
This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.
Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy. Arbuthnot.
If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley's Sermons.
2. [From spring.] Full of springs or fountains. Not used.
Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather marl them for grafs than corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- To SPRINGLE, v. a. [from springle, Dutch.]
1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses.
Take handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses springle it towards the heaven. Ex. ix. 8.
2. To scatter in drops.
Sprinkle water of purifying upon them. Num. viii. 7.
3. To besprinkle; to wash, wet, or dust by sprinkling.
Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. Heb.
Wings he wore
Of many a colour'd plume sprinkled with gold. Milton.
The prince, with living water sprinkled over
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door.
Possess'd the porch. Dryden's En.
- To SPRINGLE, v. n. To perform the act of scattering in small drops.
The priest shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger. Lev. xiv.
Baptism may well enough be performed by sprinkling, or effusion of water. Hyssop's Paragon.
When dext'rous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop,
And cleanse the spatter'd sash, and scrub the stairs, Know Saturday appears. Gay's Trivia.
- To SPRIT, v. a. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.] To throw out; to eject with force. Commonly spirt.
Toads sometimes exclude or spirt out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine. Brown.
- To SPRIT, v. n. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.] To shoot; to germinate; to sprout.
SPRIT, n. f. [from the verb.] Shoot; sprout.
The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or spirt at the root-end of the corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- SPRITSAIL*, n. f. [from spirt and sail.] The sail which belongs to the boltspirit-mast. Dick.
Our men quitted themselves of the fireship, by cutting the spirtsail tackle off with their short hatchets. Wfeman.
- SPRITE*, n. f. [Contracted from spirit.] A spirit; an incorporeal agent.
The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up, and take a salamander's name. Pope.
- SPRITFULLY*, adv. [See SPRITFULLY.] Vigorously; with life and ardour.
The Grecians spritedly drew from the darts the corse,
And heart it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman's Iliads.
- SPRONG*, v. n. The preterite of spring. Obsolete.
Not mistrusting, 'till these new curiosities spring up, that ever any man would think our labour herein mispent, or the time wastefully consumed. Hooker.
- To SPROUT, v. n. [from spring, Saxon; springen, Dutch.]
1. To shoot by vegetation; to germinate.
Try whether these things in the sprouting do increase weight, by weighing them before they are hanged up; and afterwards again, when they are sprouted. Bacon.
That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves. Bacon's Natural History.
We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grains, whole ends, cut off, have notwithstanding sprouted. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- Old Baucis is by old Philemon seen Sprouting with sudden leaves of brightly green. Dryden.
Hence sprouting plants enrich the plain and wood:
For phylick some, and some design'd for food. Blackmore.
Envy'd Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top the proudly bears,
Eludes the ax, and sprouts against the stroke,
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars. Prior.

SPU

Rub malt between your hands to get the come or sprouting clean away. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 2. To shoot into ramifications.
 Vitriol is apt to sprout with moisture.
 3. To grow.
 Th' enliv'ning dust its head begins to rear,
 And on the ashes sprouting plumes appear. Tickell.
SPROUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A shoot of a vegetable.
 Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.
 Early ere the odorous breath of morn
 Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassell'd horn Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
 Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.
 To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray on the Creation.
SPRUCE. adj. [Skinner derives this word from preux, French;
 but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout; Cassanbon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came pruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance.
 The tree
 That wraps that crystal in a wooden tomb,
 Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Dante.
 Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
 Tho' some more spruce companion thou do'st meet. Dante.
 Along the crisp shades and bow'rs
 Revels the spruce and jocund Spring;
 The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
 Thither all their bounties bring.
 I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practised by many chymists. Boyle.
 He put his band and beard in order,
 The sprucer to accost and board her. Hudibras.
 He is so spruce, that he can never be genteel. Tatler.
 This Tim makes a strange figure with that ragged coat under his livery: can't he go spruce and clean? Arbutnot.
 To SPRUCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dress with affected neatness.
SPRUCEBEER. n. f. [from spruce, a kind of fir.] Beer tinctured with branches of fir.

 The leather was of Pruce. Dryden's Fables.
SPRUCENESS. n. f. [from spruce.] Neatness without elegance.
SPRUNG. The preterite and participle passive of spring.
 Tall Norway fir, their masts in battle spent,
 And English oaks, sprung leaks, and planks, restore. Dryd.
 Now from beneath Maleas' airy heights,
 Aloft the sprung, and iter'd to Thebes her flight. Pope.
 Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I. Pope.
SPRUNT. n. f. Any thing that is short and will not easily bend.
SPUD. n. f. A short knife.
 My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixt,
 Than strongest weeds that grow these stones betwixt:
 My spud these nettles from the stones can part,
 No knife so keen to weed thee from my heart. Swift.
SPULLERS of Yarn. n. f. Are such as are employed to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. Dict.
SPUME. n. f. [from spuma, Latin.] Foam; froth.
 Materials dark and crude,
 Of spirituous and fiery spume, till touch'd
 With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
 So beauteous, op'ning to the ambient light. Milton.
 Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which are caused by the airy parts disfused by the congealable mixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 To SPUME. v. n. [from spuma, Latin.] To foam; to froth.
SPUMOUS. adj. [from spume, Latin; from the noun.] Frothy;
SPUMY. } foamy.
 The cause is the putrefaction of the body by unnatural heat:
 the putrifying parts suffer a turgescence, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend into the surface of the water. Brown.
 Not with more madnels, rolling from afar,
 The spumy waves proclaim the wat'ry war;
 And mounting upwards with a mighty roar,
 March onwards, and insult the rocky shore. Dryden.
 The spumous and florid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbutnot.
SPUN. The preterite and part. pass. of spin.
 The nymph nor spin, nor drest with artful pride;
 Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was ty'd. Addison.
SPUNGE. n. f. [from spongia, Latin.] A sponge. See SPONGE.
 When he needs what you have glean'd, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Considering the motion that was impressed by the painter's hand upon the sponge, compounded with the specific gravity of the sponge and the resistance of the air, the sponge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion. Bentley's Sermons.

SPU

 To SPUNGE. v. n. [Rather To sponge.] To hang on others for maintenance.
 This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sponging
 while you are young. Swift to Esq.
SPUNGINGHOUSE. n. f. [from sponge and house.] A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.
 A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a sponginghouse. Sw.
SPUNGY. adj. [from sponge.]
 1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.
 Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
 And into cloth of spungy softness made,
 Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
 To ruin with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.
 2. Wet; moist; watery.
 There is no lady of more softer bowels,
 More spungy to suck in the sense of fear. Shakespeare.
 I saw Jove's bird; the Roman eagle, wing'd
 From the spungy South to this part of the West,
 There vanish'd in the sun-beams. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 3. Drunken; wet with liquor.
 What cannot we put upon
 His spungy officers? Shakespeare.
SPUNK. n. f. Rotten wood; touchwood. See SPONK.
 To make white powder, the best way is by the powder of rotten willows: spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it ruffet. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SPUR. n. f. [from spura, Sax. spore, Danish, Islandick, and Dutch, esperen, French.]
 1. A sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.
 He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better,
 Had come upon the spur to redeem Philoclea's picture. Sidney.
 Whether the body politic be
 A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
 Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
 He can command it, lets it straight feel the spur. Shakespeare.
 He presently felt spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company. Knolles's History of the Turks.
 Was I for this entitled, fir,
 And girt with rusty sword and spur,
 For fame and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.
 2. Incitement; instigation.
 Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire whereof provoketh unto motion; how should that divine power of the soul, that spirit of our mind, ever stir itself into action, unless it have also the like spur? Hooker.
 What need we any spurs, but our own cause,
 To prick us to redress? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
 His laws are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of providence of the future, to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.
 Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all laudable attempts; and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are proposed. Dryden.
 The chief, if not only, spur to human industry and action, is uneasiness. Locke.
 The former may be a spur to the latter, till age makes him in love with the study, without any childish bait. Cicero.
 3. A stimulus; a prick; any thing that galls and teases.
 Grief and patience, rooted in him both,
 Mingle their spurs together. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 4. The sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.
 Of birds the bill is of like matter with the teeth: as for their spur, it is but a nail. Bacon.
 Animals have natural weapons to defend and offend; some talons, some claws, some spurs and beaks. Key.
 5. Any thing standing out; a snag.
 The strong bas'd promontory
 Have I made shake, and pluckt up by the spurs. Shakespeare.
 The pine and cedar.
 To SPUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To prick with the spur; to drive with the spur.
 My friend, who always takes care to cure his horse of flat-ting fits, spurred him up to the very side of the coach. Addison.
 Your father, when he mounted,
 Rein'd 'em in strongly, and he spurred 'd them hard. Dryden.
 Who would be at the trouble of learning, when he finds his ignorance is carested? But when you brow-beat and maul them, you make them men; for though they have no natural mettle, yet, if they are spurred and kicked, they will mend their pace. Cellier on Pride.
 2. To instigate; to incite; to urge forward.
 Lovers break not hours,
 Unless it be to come before their time: Shakespeare.
 So much they spur their expedition.
 Let the awe he has got upon their minds be so tempered with the marks of good-will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Locke.

SPU

3. To drive by force.
 Love will not be spurr'd to what it loathes. Shakespeare.
 To SPUR. v. n.
 1. To travel with great expedition.
 With backward bows the Parthians shall be there,
 And, spurring from the fight, confess their fear:
 A double wreath shall crown out Caesar's brows. Dryden.
 2. To press forward.
 Ascanius took th' alarm, while yet he led,
 And spurring on, his equals soon o'erpass'd. Dryden.
 Some bold men, though they begin with infinite ignorance and error, yet, by spurring on, refine themselves. Grew.
SPURGALLED. adj. [from spur and gall.] Hurt with the spur.
 I was not made a horse,
 And yet I bear a burthen like an ass,
Spurgall'd and tir'd, by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.
 What! shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
 Or each new pension'd cypharant, pretend
 To break my windows, if I treat a friend. Pope.
SPURGE. n. f. [from spurgis, French; spurge, Dutch, from purgo, Latin.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants. Skinner.
 The flower consists of one leaf, of the globous bell shape, cut into several moon-shaped segments, and encompassed by two little leaves, which seem to perform the office of a flower-cup; the point is for the most part triangular, which rises from the bottom of the flower, and becomes a fruit of the same shape, divided into three cells, each containing an oblong seed. Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice.
 There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which wartwort is one. The first sort, called broad-leaved spurge, is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cata-putia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts; but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustick. Miller.
 The leaves of cataputia, or spurge, being plucked upwards or downwards, perform their operations by purge or vomit; is a strange conceit, affecting unto plants positional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
SPURGE Laurel, or Mezerion. n. f. [from spurgis, Latin.] A plant.
 The characters are: the flower consists of one leaf, is, for the most part, funnel-shaped, and cut into four segments; from whose centre rises the point, which afterward becomes an oval fruit, which is in some full of juice, but in others is dry. In each is contained one oblong seed. It is a rough purge. Miller.
SPURIOUS. adj. [from spurius, Latin.]
 1. Not genuine; counterfeit; adulterine.
 The coin that shows the first is generally rejected as spurious, nor is the other esteemed more authentick by the present Roman medallists. Addison on Italy.
 If any thing else has been printed, in which we really had any hand, it is loaded with spurious additions. Swift.
 2. Not legitimate; bastard.
 Your Scipio's, Caesar's, Pompey's, and your Cato's,
 These gods on earth, are all the spurious brood
 Of violated marriages. Addison's Cato.
SPURLING. n. f. [from spurlan, French.] A small sea-fish.
 All-faints, do lay for porke and fowle,
 For sprats and spurlings for your house. Tusser.
 To SPURN. v. a. [from spurnan, Saxon.]
 1. To kick; to strike or drive with the foot.
 They suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
 And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 Say my request's unjust,
 And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
 Thou art not honest. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 You that did void your rheum upon my beard,
 And foot me as you spurn a stranger cur
 Over your threshold. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
 He in the surging smoke
 Uplifted spurn'd the ground. Milton.
 So was I forc'd
 To do a sovereign justice to myself,
 And spurn thee from my presence. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 Then will I draw up my legs, and spurn her from me with my foot. Addison's Spectator.
 A milk-white bull shall at your altars stand,
 That threatens a fight, and spurns the rising sand.
 When Athens links by fates unjust,
 When wild barbarians spurn her dust.
 Now they, who reach Parnassus' lofty crown, Employ their pains to spurn some others down. Pope.
 2. To reject; to scorn; to put away with contempt; to disdain.
 In wisdom I should ask your name;
 But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
 What fate and nicely I might well delay,
 By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Shakespeare.
 3. To treat with contempt.
 Domesticks will pay a more cheerful service, when they find themselves not spurn'd, because fortune has laid them at their masters feet. Locke.

SPY

To SPURN. v. n.
 1. To make contemptuous opposition; to make insolent resistance.
 A son to blunt the sword
 That guards the peace and safety of your person;
 Nay more, to spurn at your most royal image. Shakespeare.
 I, Pandulph, do religiously demand
 Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
 So wilfully do'st spurn? Shakespeare's King John.
 Instruct me why
 Vane should spurn against our rule, and stir
 The tributary provinces to war. Philips's Briton.
 2. To toss up the heels; to kick or struggle.
 The drunken chairman in the kennel spurns,
 The glasses shatters, and his charge o'erturns. Gay.
SPURN. n. f. [from the verb.] Kick; insolent and contemptuous treatment.
 The insolence of office, and the spurns
 That patient merit of th' unworthy takes. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
SPURNEY. n. f. A plant.
SPURRIER. n. f. [from spur.] One who uses spurs.
SPURRIER. n. f. [from spur.] One who makes spurs.
SPURRY. n. f. [from spuria, Latin.] A plant.
Spurry feed is sown in the low countries in Summer, the first time in May, that it may flower in June and July; and in August the seed is ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 To SPURT. v. n. [See To SPURT.] To fly out with a quick stream.
 If from a puncture of a lancet, the manner of the spurring out of the blood will shew it. Wifeman's Surgery.
SPURWAY. n. f. [from spur and way.] A horseway; a bridle-road;
 distinct from a road for carriages.
SPUTATION. n. f. [from sputum, Latin.] The act of spitting.
 A moist consumption receives its nomenclature from a moist sputation, or expectoration: a dry one is known by its dry cough. Harvey on Consumptions.
 To SPUTTER. v. n. [from spat, Latin.]
 1. To emit moisture in small flying drops.
 If a manly drop or two fall down,
 It scalds along my cheeks, like the green wood,
 That, sputtering in the flame, works outward into tears. Dry.
 2. To fly out in small particles with some noise.
 The nightly virgin, while her wheel she plies,
 Foresees the storms impending in the skies,
 When sparkling lamps their sputtering light advances,
 And in the sockets oily bubbles dance. Dryden.
 3. To speak hastily and obscurely, as with the mouth full; to throw out the spittle by hasty speech.
 A pinking owl sat sputtering at the sun, and asked him what he meant to stand staring her in the eyes. L'Estrange.
 They could neither of them speak their rage; and so fell a sputtering at one another, like two roasting apples. Combeville.
 Though he sputter through a cession,
 It never makes the least impression;
 What'er he speaks for madnes goes. Swift.
 To SPUTTER. v. a. To throw out with noise and heli-tation.
 Thou do'st with lies the throne invade,
 Obtending heav'n for what'er ills befall;
 And sputtering under specious names thy gall. Dryden.
 In the midst of carefices, and without the least pretended incitement, to sputter out the basest accusations! Swift.
SPUTTERER. n. f. [from sputter.] One that sputters.
SPY. n. f. [from spio, Welsh; espion, French; spie, Dutch; speculator, Latin.] It is observed by a German, that spy has been in all ages a word by which the eye, or office of the eye, has been expressed: thus the Arimaspians of old, fabled to have but one eye, were so called from ari, which, among the nations of Caucasus, still signifies one, and spi, which has been received from the old Ahatiack languages for an eye, sight, or one that sees. One sent to watch the conduct or motions of others;
 one sent to gain intelligence in an enemy's camp or country.
 We'll hear poor rogues
 Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
 And take upon's the mystery of things;
 As if we were God's spies. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Spies of the Volcians
 Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheel
 Three or four miles about. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Every corner was posses'd by diligent spies upon their master and mistress. Clarendon.
 I come no spy,
 With purpose to explore, or to disturb,
 The secrets of your realm. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Such command we had,
 To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
 Or enemy, while God was in his work. Milton.
 Nothing lies hid from radiant spies;
 All they subdue become their spies;
 Secrets, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair. Waller.
 O'er

SQU

O'er my men I'll set my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes.
These wretched spies of wit must then confess,
They take more pains to please themselves the less.
Those who attend on their state, are so many spies placed upon them by the publick to observe them nearly.
To spy. v. a. [See SPY. n. f.]
1. To discover by the eye at a distance, or in a state of concealment; to spy.
Light hath no tongue, but is all eye;
If it could speak as well as spy,
This were the worst that it could say,
That being well I fain would stay.
As tiger spy'd two gentle fawns.
A countryman spied a snake under a hedge, half frozen to death.
My brother Guyomar, methinks, I spy:
Haste in his steps, and wonder in his eye.
One in reading skip'd over all sentences where he spy'd a note of admiration.
2. To discover by close examination.
Let a lawyer tell he has spy'd some defect in an entail, how solicitous are they to repair that error.
3. To search or discover by artifice.
Moses sent to spy out Jaazer, and took the villages.
To SPY. v. n. To search narrowly.
It is my nature's plague
To spy into abuse; and oft my jealousy Shapes faults that are not.
SPYBOAT. n. f. [spy and boat.] A boat sent out for intelligence.
Giving the colour of the sea to their spys to keep them from being discovered, came from the Venetians.
SQUAB. adj. [I know not whence derived.]
1. Unfeathered; newly hatched.
Why must old pigeons, and they stale, be dress'd,
When there's so many squab ones in the nest.
2. Fat; thick and stout; awkwardly bulky.
The nappy ale goes round,
Nor the squab daughter nor the wife were nice,
Each health the youths began, Sim pledg'd it twice.
SQUAB. n. f. A kind of sofa or couch; a stuffed cushion.
On her large squab you find her spread,
Like a fat corpse upon a bed.
SQUAB. adv. With a heavy sudden fall; plump and flat. A low word.
The eagle took the tortoise up into the air, and dropt him down, squab, upon a rock, that dashed him to pieces.
SQUABPIE. n. f. [squab, and pie.] A pie made of many ingredients.
Cornwall squabpie, and Devon whitepot brings,
And Leicester beans and bacon, food of kings.
To SQUAB. v. n. To fall down plump or flat; to squelch or squall.
SQUABISH. adj. [from squab.] Thick; heavy; fleshy.
Diet renders them of a squabbish or lardy habit of body.
To SQUABBLE. v. n. [kiabla, Swed. bl.] To quarrel; to debate peevishly; to wrangle; to fight.
Drunk? and speak parrot? and squabble? swagger? oh, thou invincible spirit of wine!
I thought it not improper in a squabbling and contentious age, to detect the vanity of confiding ignorance.
If there must be disputes, is not squabbling less inconvenient than murder?
The sense of these propositions is very plain, though logicians might squabble a whole day, whether they should rank them under negative or affirmative.
SQUABBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A low brawl; a petty quarrel.
In popular factions, pragmatick fools commonly begin the squabble, and crafty knaves reap the benefit.
A man whose personal courage is suspected, is not to drive squadrons before him; but may be allowed the merit of some squabble, or throwing a bottle at his neighbour's head.
SQUABBLER. n. f. [from squabble.] A quarrelsome fellow; a brawler.
SQUADRON. n. f. [squadron, Fr. squadron, Italian, from quadratus, Latin.]
1. A body of men drawn up square.
Just met, and closing stood in squadron join'd.
2. A part of an army; a troop.
Nothing the Moors were more afraid of, than in a set battle to fight with squadrons coming orderly on.
Then beauteous Atys, with Iulus bred,
Of equal age, the second squadron led.
3. Part of a fleet, a certain number of ships.
Rome could not maintain its dominion over so many provinces, without squadrons ready equipt.
SQUADRONED. adj. [from squadron.] Formed into squadrons.
They gladly thither haste; and by a choir
Of squadron'd angels hear his carol sung.

SQU

SQUALID. adj. [squalidus, Latin.] Foul; nasty; filthy.
A doleful case desires a doleful song,
Without vain art or curious compliments,
And squalid fortune into baseness flowing,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments.
Uncomb'd his locks, and squalid his attire.
Unlike the trim of love and gay desire, Dryden's Knights Tale.
All these Cocytus bounds with squalid reeds,
With muddy ditches and with deadly weeds.
To SQUALL. v. n. [squalo, Swed. bl.] To scream out as a child or woman frighted.
In my neighbourhood, a very pretty prattling shoulder of veal squall'd out at the sight of a knife.
I put five into my coat pocket, and as to the sixth I made a countenance as if I would eat him alive. The poor man squall'd terribly.
Cornelius sunk back on a chair; the guests stood astonished, the infant squall'd.
SQUALL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Loud scream.
There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall.
2. Sudden gust of wind. A sailor's word.
SQUALLER. n. f. [from squall.] Screamer; one that screams.
SQUALOR. n. f. [Latin.] Coarseness; nastiness; want of cleanliness and neatness.
Take heed that their new flowers and sweetness do not as much corrupt as the others dryness and squalor.
What can filthy poverty give else, but beggary, fulsome nastiness, squalor, ugliness, hunger, and thirst?
SQUALLY. adj. [from squall.] Windy; gusty. A sailor's word.
SQUALMOUS. adj. [squameus, Latin.] Scaly; covered with scales.
The sea was replenish'd with fish, of the cartilaginous and squamous, as of the testaceous and crustaceous kinds.
Those galls and balls are produced, in the gems of oak, which may be called squamous oak cones.
To SQUANDER. v. a. [verschwenden, Teutonic.]
1. To scatter lavishly; to spend profusely; to throw away in idle prodigality.
We squander away some part of our fortune at play.
They often squander'd, but they never gave.
Never take a favourite waiting maid, to infatuate how great a fortune you brought, and how little you are allowed to squander.
Then, in plain prose, were made two forts of men,
To squander some, and some to hide agen.
True friends would rather see such thoughts as they communicate only to one another, than what they squander about to all the world.
How uncertain it is, whether the years we propose to ourselves shall be indulg'd to us, uncertain whether we shall have power or even inclination to improve them better than those we now squander away.
2. To scatter; to dissipate; to disperse.
He hath an argosie bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies, and other ventures he hath squander'd abroad.
The troops we squander'd first, again appear
From several quarters, and enclose the rear.
He is a successful warrior,
And has the soldiers hearts: upon the skirts
Of Arragon our squander'd troops he rallies.
SQUANDERER. n. f. [from squander.] A spendthrift; a prodigal; a waster; a lavisher.
Plenty in their own keeping, teaches them from the beginning, to be squanderers and wasters.
SQUARE. adj. [sgwâr, Welsh; quadratus, Latin.]
1. Cornered; having right angles.
All the doors and posts were square, with the windows.
Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round.
2. Forming a right angle.
This instrument is for striking lines square to other lines or straight sides, and try the squareness of their work.
3. Cornered; having angles of whatever content; as a three square, five square.
Catching up in haste his three square shield,
And thinning helmet, soon him buckled to the field.
The clavicle is a crooked bone, in the figure of an S, one end of which being thicker and slant three squares, is inserted into the first bone of the sternon.
4. Parallel; exactly suitable.
She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her.
5. Strong; stout; well set. As, a square man.
6. Equal; exact; honest; fair. As, square dealing.
All have not offended;
For those that were, it is not square to take
On those that are, revenge; crimes, like to lands,
Are not inherited.
7. [In geometry.] Square root of any number is that which multiplied by itself, produces the square, as 4 is the square root of 16; because 4x4=16; and likewise 6 the square root of 36, as 6x6=36.

SQUARE.

SQU

SQUARE. n. f. [quadra, Latin.]
1. A figure with right angles and equal sides.
Then did a sharped spire of diamond bright,
Ten feet each way in square appear to me,
Justly proportion'd up unto his height,
So far as archer might his level see.
Rais'd of grassy turf their table was;
And on her ample square from side to side
All Autumn pil'd.
2. An area of four sides, with houses on each side.
The statue of Alexander VII. stands in the large square of the town.
3. Content of an angle.
In rectangle triangles the square which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides, containing the right angle.
4. A rule or instrument by which workmen measure or form their angles.
5. Rule; regularity; exact proportion; justness of workmanship or conduct.
In St. Paul's time the integrity of Rome was famous: Corinth many ways reproved: they of Galatia much more out of square.
The whole ordinance of that government was at first evil plotted, and through other oversights came more out of square, to that disorder which it is now come unto.
I have not kept my square, but that to come Shall all be done by th' rule.
Nothing so much fetters this art of influence out of square and rule as education.
6. Squadron; troops formed square.
He alone
Dealt on lieutenantry, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war.
Our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hiding foe.
7. A square number is when another called its root can be exactly found, which multiplied by itself produces the square. The following example is not accurate.
Advance thy golden mountains to the skies,
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise;
Add one round hundred, and if that's not fair,
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square.
8. Quarterion; number four.
I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys
Which the most precious square of sense possesses,
And find I am alone felicitate
In your love.
9. Level; equality.
Men should sort themselves with their equals; for a rich man that converses upon the square with a poor man, shall certainly undo him.
We live not on the square with such as these,
Such are our betters who can better please.
10. Quartile; the astrological situation of planets, distant ninety degrees from each other.
To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine and opposite
Of noxious efficacy.
11. Rule; conformity. A proverbial use.
I shall break no squares whether it be so or not.
12. SQUARES. go. The game proceeds. Chessboards being full of squares.
One frog looked about him to see how squares went with their new king.
To SQUARE. v. a. [quadro, Latin; from the noun.]
1. To form with right angles.
He employs not on us the hammer and the chizel, with an intent to wound or mangle us, but only to square and fashion our hard and stubborn hearts.
2. To reduce to a square.
Circles to square, and cubes to double,
Wou'd give a man excessive trouble.
3. To measure; to reduce to a measure.
Stubborn crickets, apt, without a theme
For depravation, to square all the sex
By Cressid's rule.
4. To adjust; to regulate; to mould; to shape.
Dreams are toys;
Yet for this once, yea superstitiously,
I will be square'd by this.
How frankly I square my talk!
Thou'rt said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And square't thy life accordingly.
God has designed us a measure of our undertakings; his word and law, by the proportions whereof we are to square our actions.

The oracle was enforced to proclaim Socrates to be the wisest man in the world, because he applied his studies to the moral part, the squaring men's lives.
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;
A living sermon of the truths he taught;
For this by rules severe his life he squar'd,
That all might see the doctrine which they heard.
This must convince all such who have, upon a wrong interpretation, presumed to square opinions by theirs, and have in loud exclamations shewn their abhorrence of university education.
5. To accommodate; to fit.
Eye me, blest providence, and square my trial
To my proportion'd strength.
6. To respect in quartile.
O'er libra's sign a crowd of foes prevails,
The icy goat and crab that square the scales.
Some professions can equally square themselves to, and thrive under all revolutions of government.
To SQUARE. v. n.
1. To suit with; to fit with.
I set them by the rule, and, as they square,
Or deviate from undoubted doctrine, fare.
His description squares exactly to lime.
These marine bodies do not square with those opinions, but exhibit phenomena that thwart them.
2. To quarrel; to go to opposite sides.
Are you such fools
To square for this? would it offend you then
That both should speed!
But they do square, that all their elves for fear
Creep into acorn cups, and hide them there.
SQUARENESS. n. f. [from square.] The state of being square.
This instrument is for striking lines square to other lines or straight lines, and try the squareness of their work.
Motion, squareness, or any particular shape, are the accidents of body.
SQUASH. n. f. [from quash.]
1. Any thing soft and easily crushed.
Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before it is a peacock, or a coddling, when it is almost an apple.
2. [Metaphor.] A plant.
The characters are, it hath the whole appearance of a pumpkin or gourd; from which this differs in its fruit, which is roundish, fleshy, streaked, angular, and for the most part divided into five partitions, inclosing flat seeds adhering to a spongy placenta.
Squash is an Indian kind of pumpkin that grows apace.
3. Any thing unripe; any thing soft. In contempt.
How like I then was to this kernel,
This squash, this gentleman.
4. A sudden fall.
Since they will overload my shoulders, I shall throw down the burden with a squash among them.
5. A shock of soft bodies.
My fall was stopped by a terrible squash that sounded louder than the cataract of Niagara.
To SQUASH. v. a. To crush into pulp.
To SQUAT. v. n. [quattare, Italian.] To sit cowering; to sit close to the ground.
SQUAT. adj. [from the verb.]
1. Cowering; close to the ground.
Him there they found,
Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve,
Her dearest com'rades never caught her Squat on her hams.
2. Short and thick; having one part close to another, as those of an animal contracted and cowering.
The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish: the head is broad and squat.
Alma in verse, in prose, the mind,
By Aristotle's pen defin'd,
Throughout the body squat or tall,
Is bona fide, all in all.
SQUAT. n. f.
1. The posture of cowering or lying close.
A ditch-fall'n cheek that hangs below the jaw,
Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face.
2. A sudden fall.
Bruises, squats and falls, which often kill others, can bring little hurt to those that are temperate.
SQUAT. n. f. A sort of mineral.
The squat consists of tin ore and spar incorporated.
To SQUEAK. v. n. [squæa, Swed. bl.]
1. To set up a sudden dolorous cry; to cry out with pain.
2. To cry with a shrill acute tone.
The sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

Shakespeare.

Cart

SQU

Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored.
 I see the new Arion sail,
 The lute still trembling underneath thy nail;
 At thy well sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
 The trebles squeak for fear, the bates roar.
 Blunderbusses planted in every loop-hole, go off constantly at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar.
 Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans squeaking through the mouth of an eunuch?
 How like brutes organs are to ours;
 They grant, if higher pow'rs think fit,
 A bear might soon be made a wit;
 And that for any thing in nature,
 Pigs might squeak love-odes, dogs bark satyr.
 And as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks.
 Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Homer.
 3. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.
 If he be obdurate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him.
SQUEAK. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill quick cry; a cry of pain.
 Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
 In panick horror of pursuing dogs:
 With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
 Poor swine! as if their pretty hearts wou'd break.
 To SQUEAL. v. n. [from squale, Swedish.] To cry with a shrill sharp voice; to cry with pain. Squeak seems a short sudden cry, and squeal a cry continued.
SQUEAMISH. adj. [for quæmish or qualmish, from qualm.]
 Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.
 Yet, for countenance sake, he seemed very squeamish in respect of the charge he had of the prince's Pamela.
 Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish,
 That takes a basting for a blemish;
 For what's more honourable than scars,
 Of skin to tatters rent in wars?
 His musick is ruffick, and perhaps too plain,
 The men of squeamish taste to entertain.
 It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and voracious.
 There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the mo-derns, or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either.
SQUEAMISHNESS. n. f. [from squeamish.] Niceness; delicacy;
 fastidiousness.
 The thorough-pac'd politician must presently laugh at the squeamishness of his conscience, and read it another lecture.
 Upon their principles they may revive the worship of the host of heaven; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of stomach.
 To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable.
 To SQUEEZE. v. a. [Cyprian, Saxon; ys-gwasgu, Welsh.]
 1. To press; to crush between two bodies.
 It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the press for printing.
 The sinking of the earth would make an extraordinary convulsion of the air, and that crack must shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours.
 He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground,
 And squeez'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd.
 None acted mournings forc'd to show,
 Or squeez'd his eyes to make the torrent flow.
 When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
 If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand?
 In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden.
 2. To force between close bodies.
 1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.
 A concave sphere of gold fill'd with water and folder'd up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold.
 What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
 In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
 Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
 Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.
 2. To force way through close bodies.
 Many a publick minister comes empty in; but when he has cramped his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off.

SQU

SQUEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.
 A subtle artiff stands with wond'rous bag,
 That bears imprison'd winds, of gentler sort
 Than those that erst Laertes' son enclos'd:
 Peaceful they sleep; but let the tuneful squeeze
 Of lab'ring elbow rouse them, out they fly
 Melodious, and with spritely accents charm.
SQUELCH. n. f. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.
 He tore the earth which he had sav'd
 From squelch of knights, and storm'd and rav'd.
 So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squelch, away he scampers, bawling like mad.
SQUIB. n. f. [from schiben, German, to push forward.] This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.
 1. A small pipe of paper filled with wildfire. Used in sport.
 The armada at Calais, fir Walter Raleigh was wont pre-tily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats manœuvres, and sent upon them.
 The forest of the south, compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes.
 Lampoons, like squibs, may make a present blaze;
 But time, and thunder, pay respect to bays.
 Furious he begins his march,
 Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch;
 With squibs and crackers arm'd to throw
 Among the trembling crowd below.
 2. Any petty fellow.
 Asked for their pass by every squib,
 That list at will them to revile or snub.
 The squibs, in the common phrase, are called libellers.
SQUILL. n. f. [from quilla, Italian; quille, Fr.]
 1. A plant.
 It hath a large acrid bulbous root like an onion; the leaves are broad; the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the starry hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves.
 Seed or kernels of apples and pears put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come up earlier than in the earth itself.
 'Twill down like oxymel of squills.
 The self same atoms
 Can, in the trusse, furnish out a feast;
 And nauseate, in the scaly squill, the taste.
 2. A fish.
 3. An insect.
 The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings: the head broad and squat.
SQUINANCY. n. f. [from quincance, quincance, Fr. quincatia, Italian.]
 An inflammation in the throat; a quinsy.
 It is used for quincancies and inflammations of the throat;
 whereby it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue.
 In a quincancy there is danger of suffocation.
SQUINT. adj. [from quinto, Dutch, oblique, transverse.] Looking obliquely; looking not directly; looking suspiciously.
 Where an equal poise of hope and fear Does arbitrate the event, my nature is That I incline to hope rather than fear,
 And gladly banish squint suspicion.
 To SQUINT. v. n. To look obliquely; to look not in a direct line of vision.
 Some can squint when they will; and children set upon a table with a candle behind them, both eyes will move outwards, as affecting to see the light, and so induce squinting.
 Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another over-against it.
 To SQUINT. v. a.
 1. To form the eye to oblique vision.
 This is the foul Flibbertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hairlip.
 2. To turn the eye obliquely.
 Perkin began already to squint one eye upon the crown, and another upon the sanctuary.
SQUINTED. adj. [from squint and eye.]
 1. Having the sight directed obliquely.
 He was so squinted, that he seem'd spitefully to look upon them whom he beheld.
 2. Indirect; oblique; malignant.
 Which seeming to look upwards on his glories,
 Looks down upon my fears.
SQUINTING. adj. Squinting. A cant word.
 The timbrel and the squinting maid
 Of his awe thee; left the gods for sin,
 Should, with a swelling droply stuff thy skin.

STA

To SQUINT. v. n. To look askint. A cant word.
 I remember thine eyes well enough:
 Do'st thou squint at me?
SQUIRE. n. f. [Contraction of esquire; esquier, French. See ESQUIRE.]
 1. A gentleman next in rank to a knight.
 He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—Ay, that I will, come out and long tail under the degree of a squire.
 The rest are princes, barons, knights, squires,
 And gentlemen of blood.
 2. An attendant on a noble warrior.
 Old Bute's form he took, Anchises' squire
 Now left to rule Afcenius.
 Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage.
 3. An attendant at court.
 Return with her—
 I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and squire-like pension beg,
 To keep bare life a-foot.
SQUIREL. n. f. [from squire, French; securus, Latin.] A small animal that lives in woods, remarkable for leaping from tree to tree.
 One chance'd to find a nut,
 In the end of which a hole was cut,
 Which lay upon a hazel-root,
 There scatter'd by a squirel:
 Which out the kernel gotten had;
 When quoth this fay, dear queen be glad,
 Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
 I'll set you safe from peril.
 To SQUIRT. v. a. To throw out in a quick stream. Of uncertain etymology.
 Sir Roger she mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he passed along.
 To SQUIRT. v. n. To sprout; to let fly. Low cant.
 You are so given to squirting up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a prime minister.
SQUIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. An instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.
 He with his squirt-fire cou'd disperse
 Whole troops.
 There is war declared by a lord; his weapons are a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter.
 2. A small quick stream.
 Water those with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dugged water.
SQUIRTER. n. f. [from squirt.] One that plies a squirt.
 The squirters were at it with their kennel water, for they were mad for the loss of their bubble.
 To STAB. v. a. [from staven, old Dutch.]
 1. To pierce with a pointed weapon.
 Be't lawful, that I invoke thy ghost,
 To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
 Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son;
 Stab'd by the self same hand that made these wounds.
 Thou had'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
 Which thou hast whetted on thy fony heart,
 To stab at my frail life.
 With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war;
 But in fair combat fight.
 Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet, are looked on as no distinct species of action; but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name; as in England, where it is called stabbing.
 Porcius, think, thou seest thy dying brother
 Stab'd at his heart, and all besmear'd with blood,
 Storming at thee!
 2. To wound mortally or mischievously.
 He speaks poinards, and every word stabs.
 What tears will then be shed!
 Then, to compleat her woes, will I espouse
 Hermione:—'twill stab her to the heart!
STAB. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A stab or wound with a sharp pointed weapon.
 The elements
 Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt at stabs
 Kill the still closing waters.
 Unworthy was thy fate, thou first of warriors,
 To fall beneath a base assassin's stab.
 2. A dark injury; a fly mischief.
 3. A stroke; a blow.
 He had a suitable scripture ready to repel them all; every pertinent text urg'd home being a direct stab to a temptation.
STABBER. n. f. [from stab.] One who stabs; a privy mur-derer.
STABILIMENT. n. f. [from stabilis, Latin.] Support; firmness; act of making firm.
 They serve for stabiliment, propagation and shade.

STA

STABILITY. n. f. [from stabilis, Fr. from stabilitas, Latin.]
 1. Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.
 By the same degrees that either of these happen, the stability of the figure is by the same lessened.
 These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
 These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
 Such strength and such stability impart,
 That forms above, and earthquakes under ground
 Break not the pillars.
 He began to try
 This and that hanging stone's stability.
 2. Fixedness; not fluidity.
 Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this,
 that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion.
 3. Firmness of resolution.
STABLE. adj. [from stabilis, Fr. stabilis, Latin.]
 1. Fixed; able to stand.
 2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.
 If man would be unvariable,
 He must be like a rock or stone, or tree;
 For ev'n the perfect angels were not stable,
 But had a fall more desperate than we.
 He perfect, stable; but imperfect we,
 Subject to change.
 3. Strong; fixed in state.
 This region of chance and vanity, where nothing is stable, nothing equal; nothing could be offered to-day but what tomorrow might deprive us of.
STABLE. n. f. [from stabilis, Latin.] A house for beasts.
 I will make Rabbah a stable for camels.
 To STABLE. v. n. [from stabilis, Latin.] To kennel; to dwell as beasts.
 In their palaces,
 Where luxury late reign'd, sea monsters whelp'd.
 And stabled.
STABLEBOY. n. f. [from stable and boy, or man.] One who attends in the stable.
 As soon as you alight at the inn, deliver your horses to the stableboy.
 If the gentleman hath lain a night, get the stablemen and the scullion to stand in his way.
 I would with jockeys from Newmarket dine,
 And to rough riders give my choicest wine;
 I would carels some stableman of note,
 And imitate his language and his coat.
STABLENESS. n. f. [from stable.]
 1. Power to stand.
 2. Steadiness; constancy; stability.
 As justice, verity, temperance, stability,
 Bounty, perseverance, I have no relish of them.
STABLESTAND. n. f. [In law.] Is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a man is convinced to intend the stealing of the king's deer in the forest: and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest with a cross bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or with a long bow, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip.
 I'll keep my stablestand where I lodge my wife, I'll go in couples with her.
 To STABLISH. v. a. [from stabilis, Fr. stabilis, Latin.] To establish; to fix; to settle.
 Then the began a treaty to procure,
 And stablish terms betwixt both their requests.
 Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
 And stablish quietness on ev'ry side.
 Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good work.
 Poor hereticks in love there be,
 Which think to stablish dangerous constancy;
 But I have told them, since you will be true,
 You shall be true to them who're false to you.
 His covenant sworn
 To David, stablish'd as the days of heav'n.
STACK. n. f. [from stacca, Italian.]
 1. A large quantity of hay, corn, or wood, heaped up regularly together.
 Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height, which the watermen that bring wood down the Seine laid there.
 While the marquis and his servant on foot were chafing the kid about the stack, the prince from horseback killed him with a pistol.
 While the cock
 To the stack or the barn-door
 Stoutly struts his dame before.
 Stacks of moist corn grow hot by fermentation.

1. August; grand; lofty; elevated; majestic; magnificent.
A statelier pyramid to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's or Memphis' ever was. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
These regions have abundance of high cedars, and other stately trees casting a shade. Raleigh's History of the World.
Truth, like a stately dome, will not shew herself at the first visit. South.
- He many a walk travers'd
Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm. Milton.
2. Elevated in mien or sentiment.
He maintains majesty in the midst of plainness, and is stately without ambition, which is the vice of Lucan. Dryden.
- STATELY. adv. [from the adjective.] Majestically.
Ye that stately tread or lowly creep.
STATESMAN. n. f. [state and man.]
1. A politician; one versed in the arts of government.
It looks grave enough
To seem a statesman. Ben. Johnson's Epig.
The corruption of a poet is the generation of a statist.
Pope.
2. One employed in publick affairs.
If such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be. Shaksp. Othello.
It is a weakness which attends high and low; the statesman who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the plough. South's Sermons.
A British minister must expect to see many friends fall off, whom he cannot gratify, since, to use the phrase of a late statist- man, the pasture is not large enough. South's Sermons.

- Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.
- STATSWOMAN. n. f. [state and woman.] A woman who meddles with publick affairs. In contempt.
How she was in debt, and where the meat
To raise fresh fums: she's a great statswoman! B. Johnson.
Several objects may innocently be ridiculed, as the passions of our statswomen. Arbutnot.
- STATICAL. adj. [from the noun.] Relating to the science of weighing.
A man weigheth some pounds less in the height of Winter, according to experience, and the statist aphorisms of Sanctorius. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If one by a statist engine could regulate his insensible perspiration, he might often, by restoring of that, foretell, prevent, or shorten a fit of the gout. Arbutnot on Diet.
- STATICKS. n. f. [statique, French.] The science which considers the weight of bodies.
This is a catholic rule of staticks, that if any body be bulk for bulk heavier than a fluid, it will sink to the bottom; and if lighter, it will float upon it, having part extant, and part immersed, as that so much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part be equal in gravity to the whole. Bentley.
- STATION. n. f. [station, French; statio, Latin.]
1. The act of standing.
Their manner was to stand at prayer, whereupon their meetings unto that purpose on those days had the names of stations given them. Hooker.
2. A state of rest.
All progression is performed by drawing on or impelling forward some part which was before in station or at quiet, where there are no joints. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
3. A place where any one is placed.
In station like the herald, Mercury,
New-lighted on a heav'n-kissing hill. Shaksp. Timon.
The seditions remained within their station, which, by reason of the nativeness of the beastly multitude, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.
The planets in their station list'ning stood.
To single stations now what years belong,
With planets join'd, they claim another song. Creech.
4. Post assigned; office.
Michael in ether hand leads them out of Paradise, the fiery serpent waving behind them, and the cherubims taking their stations to guard the place. Milton.
5. Situation; position.
The fig and date, why love they to remain
In middle station and an even plain;
While in the lower marsh the gourd is found,
And while the hill with olive-hedge is crown'd? Prior.
6. Employment; office.
No member of a political body so mean, but it may be useful in some station or other. L'Estrange.
They believe that the common size of human understanding is fitted to some station or other. Swift.
Whether those who are leaders of a party arrive at that station more by a sort of instinct, or influence of the stars, than by the possession of any great abilities, may be a point of much dispute. Swift.
7. Character; state.
Far the greater part have kept their station. Milton.
8. Rank; condition of life.
I can be contented with an humbler station in the temple of virtue, than to be set on the pinnacle. Dryden.
- TO STATION. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a certain post, rank, or place.
STATIONARY. adj. [from statio.] Fixed; not progressive.
The same harmony and stationary constitution, as it happened in many species, so doth it fall out in individuals. Brown.
Between the decent and ascent, where the image seem'd stationary, I stopped the prism, and fixed it in that posture, that it should be moved no more. Newton's Opt.
- STATIONER. n. f. [from station.]
1. A bookseller.
Some modern tragedies are beautiful on the stage, and yet Tryphon the stationer complains they are seldom asked for in his shop. Dryden.
With authors, stationers obey'd the call;
Glory and gain th' industrious tribe provoke,
And gentle dulcets ever loves a joke. Pope's Dunciad.
2. A seller of paper.
STATIST. n. f. [from state.] A statesman; a politician; one killed in government.
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning. Shaksp. Hamlet.
I do believe,
Statist though I am none, nor like to be,
That this shall prove a war. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
Their orators thou then extoll'st, as those
The top of eloquence, statists indeed,
And lovers of their country. Milton's Paradise Reg.

STA

- STATUARY. n. f. [Statuaire, French; from statua, Latin.]
1. The art of carving images or representations of life.
The northern nations, that overwhelmed it by their numbers, were too barbarous to preserve the remains of learning more carefully than they did those of architecture and statuary. Tongle.
2. One that practises or professes the art of making statues.
On other occasions the statuaries took their subjects from the poets. Addison.
How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit and cheerfulness, when he considers that he will be read with pleasure but a very few years?
This is like employing an excellent statuary to work upon mouldering stone. Swift.
- STATUE. n. f. [statue, Fr. statua, Latin.] An image; a solid representation of any living being.
The prince's beard of her mother's statue, a piece many years in doing, and now newly perform'd by that rare Italian master. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
- They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Stare'd each on other. Shakspere's Richard III.
Architects propounded unto Alexander to cut the mountain Athos into the form of a statue, which in his right hand should hold a town capable of containing ten thousand men, and in his left a vessel to receive all the water that flowed from the mountain. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
A statue of Polycletus, called the rule, deserves that name for having so perfect an agreement in all its parts, that it is not possible to find a fault in it. Dryden's Duffessney.
- TO STATUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To place as a statue.
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead. Shakspere.
- STATUOUS. n. f. [statue, Fr. statuas, Latin.] The height of any animal.
What statue we attain at seven years we sometimes double,
most times come short of at one and twenty. Brown.
A creature who might erect
His statue, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.
Foreign men of mighty statue came,
Thyself but dull, thy statue but a span;
A moment thy duration, foolish man!
We have certain demonstration from Egyptian mummies, and Roman urns and rings, and measures and edifices, and many other antiquities, that human statue has not diminished for above two thousand years. Bentley's Sermons.
- STATUTABLE. adj. [from statute.] According to statute.
I met with one who was three inches above five feet, the statutable measure of that club. Addison's Guardian.
- STATUTE. n. f. [statut, French; statutum, Latin.] A law;
an edict of the legislature.
Not only the common law, but also the statutes and acts of parliament were specially intended for its benefit. Spenser.
Blood hath been shed
Ere human statute purg'd the gen'ral weal. Shakspere.
There was a statute against vagabonds; wherein note the dislike the parliament had of goaling them as chargeable and pestiferous. Bacon.
Know the statutes of heaven and laws of eternity, those immutable rules of justice. Tilghson's Sermons.
O queen, indulg'd by favour of the gods,
To build a town, with statutes to restrain
The wild inhabitant beneath thy reign. Dryden's Æneid.
- TO STAVE. v. a. In the plural staves. [from staff.]
1. To break in pieces; used originally of barrels made of small parts or staves.
If irreverent expression, or a thought too wanton are crept into my verses, let them be stave'd or forfeited like contrabanded goods. Dryden.
2. To push off as with a staff.
How can they escape the contagion of the writings, whom the virulency of the calumnies have not stave'd off, from reading. Ben. Johnson.
The condition of a servant staves him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing but allurements, attraction, and invitation. South's Sermons.
3. To pour out by breaking the cask.
The feared disorders that might ensue thereof have been an occasion that divers times all the wine in the city hath been stave'd. Sandys's Travels.
4. To furnish with rundles or staves.

by ladies.
2. Ropes in a ship to keep the mast from falling aft. All masts, topmasts, and flagstaves have stays, except the spritfail topmast:
the mainmast, foremast, with the masts belonging to them, have also back stays, which help to keep the mast from pitching forward or overboard. Harris.

They were come upon the stays, when one of the sailors descried a galley. Sidney.

3. Any support; any thing that keeps another extended.
Weavers stretch your stays upon the west. Dryden.

STEAD. n. f. [stēd, Saxon.]
1. Place. Obsolete.
Fly therefore, fly this fearful stead anon,
Lest thy fool hardize work thy sad confusion. Fairy Queen.

They nigh approach'd to the stead
Where as those matremids dwelt. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

The term of life is limited,
Ne may a man prolong nor shorten it;
The soldier may not move from watchful stead.
Nor leave his stand until his captain bed. Fairy Queen.

2. Room; place which another had or might have.
If we had simply taken them clean away, or else removed them, so as to place in their stead others, we had done worse.
Hooker.

There fell down many slain, and they dwelt in their steads until the captivity. Chron. v. 22.

Nor do the bold it attempts bring forth
Events still equal to their worth;
But sometimes fail, and in their stead
Fortune and cowardice succeed. Butler.

Jealousy then fir'd his soul,
And his face kindled like a burning coal;
Now cold despair succeeding in her stead,
To livid paleness turns the glowing red. Dryden.

3. Use; help. To stand in stead; to be of great use; to help; to advantage.
A complete man hath some parts, whereof the want could not deprive him of his essence; yet to have them standeth him in singular stead, in respect of special uses. Hooker.

He makes his understanding the warehouse of lumber rather than a repository of truth, which will stand him in stead
when he has occasion for it. Locke.

The smallest act of charity shall stand us in great stead.
Atterbury's Sermons.

4. The frame of a bed.
The genial bed,
Sallow the feet, the borders and the stead. Dryden.

My lord of Amiens and myself
Did steal behind him as he lay along Under an oak. Shakespeare.

I cannot think it,
That he would steal away so guilty like,
Seeing you coming. Shakespeare's Othello.

The most peaceable way, if you take a thief, is to let him show what he is, and steal out of your company. Shakespeare.

At time that lover's flights doth still conceal,
Through Athens' gate have we devis'd to steal. Shakespeare.

In my conduct shall your ladies come,
From whom you now must steal and take no leave. Shakespeare.

Others weary of the long journey, lingering behind, were stolen away; and they which were left, moided with dirt and mire. Kneller.

A bride
Should vanish from her cloaths into her bed,
As souls from bodies steal and are not spy'd. Donne.

The vapour of charcoal hath killed many, and it is the more dangerous, because it cometh without any ill smell, and steals on by little and little. Bacon's Natural History.

A soft and solemn breathing found,
Rose like a steam of rich distill'd perfumes,
And stole upon the air, that even silence
Was took ere she was ware. Milton.

As wife artills mix their colours so,
That by degrees they from each other go;
Black steals unheeded from the neighbouring white,
So on stole our blessed change. Dryden.

At a time when he had no steward, he stole away.
Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury glow,
Now sighs steal out when tears begin to flow. Pope.

2. To practise theft; to play the thief; to take any thing thievishly; to have the habit of thieving.
Stealing is the taking from another what is his, without his knowledge or allowance. Locke.

The good humour is to steal at a minute's rest. — Convey, the wife it call; steal! a fico for the phrase! Shakespeare.

STEAL'ER. n. f. [from steal.] One who steals; a thief.
The transgression is in the stealer. Shakespeare.

STEALINGLY. adv. [from stealing.] Silly; by inviolable motion; by secret practice.
They were diverse motions, they did so stealingly slip one into another, as the latter part was ever in hand before the eye could discern the former was ended. Sidney.

STEALTH. n. f. [from steal.]
1. The act of stealing; theft.
The owner proveth the stealth to have been committed upon him by such an outlaw, and to have been found in the possession of the prisoner. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The stealth of mutual entertainment
With character too gross is written on Juliet. Shakespeare.

In the secret dark that none reproves,
Their pretty stealths shall work, and snares shall spread. Spenser.

The gods persuaded Mercury,
Their good observer, to his stealth. Chapman's Iliad.

2. The thing stolen.
On his back a heavy load he bare
Of nightly stealths, and pillage several. Fairy Queen.

Store of cabins are but filthy dens, that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with splinters. Raleigh.

3. Secret act; clandestine practice. By stealth means secretly; clandestinely; with desire of concealment: but, like steal, is often used in a good sense.
The wisdom of the same spirit borrowed from melody that pleasure, which mingled with heavenly mysteries, caught the smoothness and softness of that which toucheth the ear, to convey as it were by stealth the treasure of good things into man's mind. Hooker.

I feel this youth's perfections,
With an invisible and subtle stealth,
To creep in at mine eyes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

The monarch blinded with desire of wealth,
With steal invades his brother's life by stealth
Before the sacred altar. Dryden.

Let humble Allen, with an awkward shame,
Do good by stealths, and blush to find it fame. Pope.

STEALTHY. adj. [from stealth.] Done clandestinely; performed by stealth.
Now wither'd murder with his stealthy pace,
Moves like a ghost. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

STEAM. n. f. [from steame, Saxon.] The smoke or vapour of any thing moist and hot.
Sweet odours are, in such a company as there is steam and heat, things of great refreshment. Bacon.

His offering soon propitious fire from heaven.
Consum'd with nimble glance and grateful steam. Milton.

While the temple smok'd with hallow'd steam,
They wash the virgin. Dryden.

STE

Such the figure of a feast
Which, were it not for plenty and for steam,
Might be resembled to a sick man's dream. King.

Some it bears in steam up into the air, and this in such a quantity as to be manifest to the smell, especially the sulphur.
Woodward's Natural History.

To STEAM. v. n. [from steaman, Saxon.]
1. To smoke or vapour with moist heat.
Scarcely had Phœbus in the gloomy east,
Got harnessed his fiery-footed team,
Ne rear'd above the earth his flaming crest
When the last deadly smoke aloft did steam. Fairy Queen.

See, see, my brother's ghost hangs hovering there,
O'er his warm blood, that steams into the air. Dryden.

O wretched we! Why were we hurry'd down
This lubrick and adulterate age;
Nay, added far pollutions of our own,
T' increase the steaming ordures of the stage? Dryden.

Let the crude humours dance
In heated brats, steaming with fire intense. Philips.

These minerals not only issue out at these larger exits, but steam forth through the pores of the earth, occasioning sul-phureous and other offensive stench. Woodward.

2. To send up vapours.
Ye mists that rise from steaming lake. Milton.

3. To pass in vapours.
The dissolved amber plainly swam like a thin film upon the liquour, whence it steamed away into the air. Boyle.

STEAM'ING. n. f. [from steaming.]
If the matter in a wen resembles milk-curd, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, steatoma. Sharp's Surgery.

STEED. n. f. [from stæda, Saxon.] A horse for state or war.
My noble steed I give him, Shakespeare's Macbeth.

With all his trim belonging. Milton.

Impresses quaint, caparisons and steeds. Waller.

Stout are our men, and warlike are our steeds. Waller.

She thought herself the trembling dame who fled,
And him the grisly ghost that spur'd th' infernal steed. Dryden.

Who, like our active African, instructs
The fiery steed, and trains him to his hand? Adams's Cato.

See! the bold youth strain up the threatening steed;
Hang o'er their couriers heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

STEEL. n. f. [from stæla, Saxon; stæla, Dutch.]
1. Steel is a kind of iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain closer and finer than common iron. Steel, of all other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered; whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red-hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, or other substances that abound in the phlogiston, for several hours in a close furnace. It may also be made by fusion, and several other ways; but they are greatly in the wrong who prefer steel to iron for medicinal purposes. Hill's Mat. Medica.

At her back a bow and quiver gay,
Stiff'd with steel-headed darts wherewith the quell'd
The savage beasts in her victorious play. Fairy Queen.

With mighty bars of long enduring brass
The steel-bound doors and iron gates he ties. Fairy Queen.

A looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon's Natural History.

Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not ready strike fire with steel, much less with one another; nor a flint easily with a steel, if they both be wet; the sparks being then quenched in their eruption. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought to pure
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

2. It is often used metonymically for weapons, or armour.
Brave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carv'd out his passage till he had fac'd the slave. Shakespeare.

A grove of oaks,
Whose polish'd steel from far severely shines,
Are not so dreadful as this beautiful queen. Dryden.

He sudden as the word,
In proud Plexippus' bosom plunged the sword;
Toxous amaz'd, and with amazement flows,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

3. Chalybeate medicines.
After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an antacid. Arbutnot.

4. It is used proverbially for hardness: as heads of steel.
To STEEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To point or edge with steel.
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shakespeare's R. II.

STE

2. To make hard or firm. It is used, if it be applied to the mind, very often in a bad sense.
Lies well steel'd with weighty arguments. Shakespeare.

So service shall with steel'd fingers toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakespeare's H. V.

From his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in him rebated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead. Shakespeare.

O God of battles! steel my soldiers hearts,
Possess them not with fear. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

Man, foolish man!
Scarcely know'st thou how thyself began;
Yet steel'd with study'd boldness, thou dar'st try
To send thy doubted reason's dazzled eye
Through the mysterious gulph of vast immensity. Prior.

Let the steel'd Turk be deaf to matrons' cries, See virgins ravish'd with relentless eyes. Tickell.

STEELY. adj. [from steel.]
1. Made of steel.
Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Branch'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shakespeare.

Here smokes his forge, he bares his sinewy arm,
And early strokes the founding anvil warm;
Around his shop the steely sparks flew,
As for the steed he flap'd the bending shoe. Gay.

2. Hard; firm.
That she would unarm her noble heart of that steely resistance against the sweet blows of love. Sidney.

STEELYARD. n. f. [from steel and yard.] A kind of balance, in which the weight is moved along an iron rod, and grows heavier as it is removed farther from the fulcrum. Sinnsworth.

STEEP. adj. [from stæp, Saxon.] Rising or descending with little inclination.
He now had conquer'd Anxur's steep ascent. Addison.

STEEP. n. f. Precipice; ascent or descent approaching to per-pendicularity.
As that Theban monster that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spite Cast herself headlong from the Iliac steep. Milton.

As high turrets for their airy steep
Require foundations, in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the neather heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

Instructs the beast to know his native force,
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong steep of anarchy. Dryden.

We had on each side naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thousand irregular steeps and precipices. Addison.

Leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep. Gay.

To STEEP. v. a. [from stæpen, Dutch.] To soak; to macerate;
to imbue; to dip.
When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown to fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fallness loud he 'gan to weep. Spenser.

He, like an adder, lurking in the weeds,
His wand'ring thought in deep desire does steep;
And his frail eye with spoil of beauty feeds. Fairy Queen.

A napkin steep'd in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Present to her, as sometime Marg'ret
Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,
A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain
The purple tide from her sweet brother's body. Shakespeare.

The conquering wine hath steep'd our sense
In soft and delicate Lethe. Shakespeare.

Many dream not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favours. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Four days will quickly steep themselves in night:
Four nights will quickly dream away the time. Shakespeare.

Most of the steepings are cheap things, and the goodness of the crop is a great matter of gain. Bacon.

Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood:
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours and their iktome years. Dryden.

Wheat steep'd in brine twelve hours prevents the smuttings. Martimer's Husbandry.

STEEPLE. n. f. [from stæpel, Saxon.] A turret of a church generally furnished with bells. A spire.
Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
You cataracts and hurricanes spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks. Shakespeare.

STE

What was found in many places, and preached for wheat fallen on the ground from the clouds, was but the seed of ivy-berries, and though found in steeples or high places, might be conveyed thither or muted by birds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A raven I saw yesterday steep-high, just over your house.
L'Estrange.

They, far from steeples and their sacred sound,
In fields their fullen conventicles found. Dryden.

STEELY. adv. [from steep.] With precipitous declivity.
STEEPNESS. n. f. [from steep.] Precipitous declivity.
The cragg'dness or steepness of that mountain maketh many parts of it inaccessible. Brerewood on Language.

Lord Lovel swam over Trent on horseback, but could not recover the farther side, by reason of the steepness of the bank, and so was drown'd. Bacon's Henry VII.

Vineyards, meadows, and cornfields lie on the borders, and run up all the sides of the Alps, where the barrenness of the rocks, or the steepness of the ascent will suffer them. Addison.

STEERY. adj. [from steep.] Having a precipitous declivity.
A poetical word for steep.
Who hath dispos'd, but thou, the winding way,
Where springs down from the steepy crags do beat. Wotton.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
From steepy Othrys' top to Pylus drove His herd; and for his pains enjoy'd his love. Dryden.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme! Dryden.

STEER. n. f. [from stæra, Saxon; stæra, Dutch.]
A young bullock.
They think themselves half exempted from law and obedience; and having once tasted freedom, do, like a steer that hath been long out of his yoke, grudge and rapine ever after to come under rule again. Spenser's Ireland.

Lacoon, Neptune's priest,
With solemn pomp then sacrific'd a steer. Dryden.

Nor has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him. Thomson.

To STEER. v. a. [from stæran, Saxon; stæran, Dutch.] To direct; to guide in a passage.
A comely palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripe years, and hairs all hoary gray,
That with a staff his feeble steps did steer,
Left his long way his aged limbs should tire. Fairy Queen.

If a pilot cannot see the pole star it can be no fault in him to steer his course by such stars as do best appear to him. K. Ch.

To STEER. v. n. To direct a course.
As when a ship by skilful steerman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail. Milton.

In a creature, whose thoughts are more than the sands, and wider than the ocean, fancy and passion must needs run him into strange courses, if reason, which is his only star and compass, be not that he steers by. Locke.

STEERAGE. n. f. [from steer.]
1. The act or practice of steering.
2. Direction; regulation of a course.
He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my suit. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Having got his vessel launched and set afloat, he committed the steerage of it to such as he thought capable of conducting it. Spenser.

3. That by which any course is guided.

6. To walk gravely and slowly.

Pyrrhus, the most ancient of all the bathaws, stept forth, and, appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage, In scorn of your soft looks and tender age! Cowley.

Home the swain retreats, His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson's Summer.

STEP. n. f. [stæp, Saxon; stap, Dutch.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou found and firm-set earth, Hear not my steps, which way they walk. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death, Can be at once, shall step by step attend You and your ways. Shakespeare's Tempest.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops, slain in the battle, were all set in order upon a wooden step. Knolles's History of the Turks.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Watson.

Those heights where William's virtue might have slid, And on the subject world look'd safely down, By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made Sublimar yet to raise his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, truth lies in a well; and, to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logic does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water. Watts.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. A small length; a small space.

There is but a step between me and death. 1 Sa. xx. 3.

5. Walk; passage.

O may thy pow'r, propitious still to me, Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree. Dryden's En.

6. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifold principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered. Newton.

One

One injury is best defended by a second, and this by a third: by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general, during pleasure, might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The querist must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his points, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise. Watts.

7. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astrea took her flight, and here The prints of her departing steps appear. Dryden's Virgil.

8. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne With a submissive step I halted down; The glowing garland from my hair I took, Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

9. Action; influence of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [Scop, Saxon, from steppan, to deprive or make an orphan: for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter, or step-son; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chafe but mid'doubt, left this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true filter, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother. Hooker.

His wanton step-dame loved him more; But when the law her offered sweets refuse, Her love she turn'd to hate. Fairy Queen.

You shall not find me, daughter, After the slander of most step-mothers, Ill-ey'd to you. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false. Shakespeare.

Cato the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

The name of step-dame, your practis'd art, By which you have estrang'd my father's heart, All you have done against me, or design, Shows your aversion, but begets not mine. Dryden's Aurengz.

A step-dame too I have, a curst she, Who rules my hen-peck'd fire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have guessed misis to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot on Aliments.

STEP-PINGSTONE. n. f. [step and stone.] Stone laid to catch the foot, and save it from wet or dirt.

Like steppingstones to save a stride, In streets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STERCORACEOUS. adj. [stercoraceus, Latin.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body; then a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid flesh, and in smell human faeces. Arbutnot on Aliments.

STERCORATION. n. f. [from stercora, Latin.] The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The first help is stercoration: the sheep's dung is one of the best, and next the dung of kine, and that of horses. Bacon.

Stercoration is seasonable. Euclid's Kalendar.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves not only for the security of the seed, whilst it hangs upon the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the stercoration of the soil, and promotion of the growth, though not the first germination of the seminal plant. Key on the Creation.

STEREOGRAPHY. n. f. [στερεός and γραφή; stereographic, Fr.] The art of drawing the forms of solids upon a plane. Harris.

STERILE. adj. [sterilis, French; sterilitas, Latin.] Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say, The barren, touch'd in this holy chafe, Shake off their sterility. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

Thy sea marge sterility, and rocky hard. Shaksp. Tempest.

In very sterile years corn sown will grow to another kind. Bacon's Natural History.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and sterile swim. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

She is grown sterile and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. More's Antidote against Atheism.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERILITY. n. f. [sterilitas, French; sterilitas, from sterilis, Latin.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin town of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories. Bacon's War with Spain.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley's Sermons.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To STERILIZE. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward's Natural History.

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STERLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated. The king's treasure of store, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. Bacon's Henry VII.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in testresses than in pounds sterling. Addison.

2. Genuine; having past the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentic. Swift's Polite Conversation.

STERLING. n. f. [sterlingum, low Lat. from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries, And knows that to be rich is to be wife: By useful observation he can tell The sacred charms that in true sterling dwell; How gold makes a patrician of a slave, A dwarf an Atlas, a Therites brave. Garth.

Great name, which in our rolls recorded stands, Leads honours, and protects the learned bands, Accept this offering to thy bounty dues, And Roman wealth in English sterling views. C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [stern, Saxon.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical. Shaksp. H. VI.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look, Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth, Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear, Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey, To win thee, lady. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

My sometime general, Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' th' woods. Milt.

I've seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hard'ning spectacles. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible; Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shaksp.

The common executioner, Whole heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard, Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck, But first begs pardon: will you sterner be Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shakespeare.

Did this in Caesar seem ambitious? When that the poor have cry'd, Caesar hath wept; Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

Then shall the war, and stern debate and strife Immortal, be the bus'ness of my life; And in thy fane the dusty spoils among, High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung. Dryden.

How stern as tutors, and as uncles hard, We lash the pupil and defraud the ward. Dryden's Persif.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time, Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key, All cruels else subscib'd. Shaksp. King Lear.

STERN. n. f. [stern, Saxon. Of the same original with steer.]

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

They

STE

- They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land. Dryd.

 Though wrapping up her wreathed stern around. Fa. Queen.
STERNAGE. n. f. [from stern.] The sternage or stern. Not used.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
 And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakespeare.
STERNLY. adj. [from stern.] In a stern manner; severely; truculently.

Sternly he pronounc'd
 The rigid interdiction. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face the fame,
 Nor thy limbs moulded in so soft a frame;
 Thou look'st more sternly, do'st more strongly move,
 And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love. Dryden.
STERNNESS. n. f. [from stern.]

1. Severity of look.
 Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,
 That sons of men amaz'd their sternness to behold. Spenser.
 How would he look to see his work so noble Wildly bound up! or how Should I, in these my borrow'd haunts, behold
 The sternness of his presence! Shakespeare.
 2. Severity or harshness of manners.

I have sternness in my soul enough
 To hear of soldiers work. Dryden's Cleomenes.
STERNON. n. f. [from stern.] The breast-bone.

 Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
 And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
 Enwrap't in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Fa. Queen.
 The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stew. Abbot.

2. A brothel; a house of prostitution. [This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licenced brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use.]
 There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor fallhood, and never brake promise. Ascham.

My business in this state
 Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,
 Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
 'Till it o'er-run the stew. Shakespeare.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no curtelans. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Her, though seven years she in the stew had laid,
 A nunnery durst receive and think a maid
 And though in childbed's labour she did lie,
 Midwives would swear 'twere but a tympany. Donne.

What moderate top would rake the park or stews,
 Who among troops of faultless nymphs can chuse? Roscom.
 Making his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of

STEWARD. n. f. [from steward, Saxon.]

1. One who manages the affairs of another.
 There sat yclad in red,
 Down to the ground, a comely personage,
 That in his hand a white rod managed;
 He steward was, hight diet, ripe of age,
 And in demeanour sober, and in council sage. Fa. Queen.
 Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. Shak. Timon.

Take on you the charge
 And kingly government of this your land;
 Not as protector, steward, substitute,
 Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shaksp. Richard III.

How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward. Lu. xvi.
 When a steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice.

What can be a greater honour than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency than to consider, that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives? Swift.

2. An officer of state.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
 To be high steward. Shakespeare.
STEWARDSHIP. n. f. [from steward.] The office of a

Some honour of your own acquire;
Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,
Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe. Dryden.

Yet was she not profuse; but fear'd to waste,
And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;
That all might be supply'd, and the not grieve,
When crouds appear'd, she had not to relieve;
Which to prevent, she still increas'd her store;
Laid up, and spar'd, that the might give the more. Dryden.

Beneath one law bees live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive:
All is the state's, the state provides for all. Dryden's Georg.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stock of mankind? Locke.

When we brought it out it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stock of air that it lived a minute longer the second time. Addison on Duty.

Be ready to give, and glad to distribute, by setting apart something out of thy stock for the use of some charities. Atterb.

Can be retentive to the ſtrength of ſpirit. Shak. Jul. Ceſ.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch theſe walls;
For ſtony limits cannot hold love out. Shak. Rom. and Jul.

Nor ſlept the winds
Within their ſtony caves, but ruſh'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vex'd wilderneſs, whoſe tall'eſt pines,
Though rooted deep as high and ſturdi'eſt oaks,
Bow'd their ſtiff necks, loaden with ſtormy blaſts,
Or torn up sheer. Milton's Paraſiſe Regain'd.

Here the marſhy grounds approach your fields,
And there the foil a ſtony harveſt yields. Dryden's Virgil.

Heart-ſtruck with chilling gripe of ſorrow ſtood. Milton.

STOOL. n. f. [ſtol, Gothick; ſtol, Saxon; ſteel, Dutch.]

1. A ſeat without a back, ſo diſtinguiſhed from a chair.
If a chair be defined a ſeat for a ſingle perſon, with a back belonging to it, then a ſteel is a ſeat for a ſingle perſon without a back.

Thou fearful fool,
Why takeſt not of the ſame fruit of gold?
Ne ſitt'eſt down on that ſame ſilver ſteel,
To reſt thy weary perſon in the ſhadow cold? Fa. Queen.

Now which were wife, and which were fools?
Poor Alma ſits between two ſteels. Prior.

The more the reads, the more perplex'd.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.
There be medicines that move ſteels, and not urine; ſome other urine, and not ſteels: thoſe that purge by ſteels, are ſuch as enter not at all, or little, into the meſentery veins; but either at the ſtrict are not digeſtible by the ſtomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or elſe are afterwards rejected by the meſentery veins, and ſo turn likewise downwards to the guts.

The perſiſtence motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts; elſe one would have a continual need of going to ſteel. Abbatini on Alimenti.

3. STOOL of Repentance, or catty ſteel, in the kirk of Scotland, is ſomewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In ſome places there may be a ſeat in it; but it is generally without, and the perſon ſtands therein who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays in the forenoon; and after ſermon ſermon is called upon by name and ſurname, the headle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forwards to his poſt; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are ſet to publick view adulterers; only theſe are habited in a coarſe canvas, analogous to a hairy or monaſtick veſt, with a hood to it, which they call the ſack or ſackcloth, and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreaſonable judgment of things brings many a great man to the ſteel of repentance. L'Eſtrange.

Whose blood and judgment are so well commingl'd,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger,
To sound what stop the please. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
The harp
Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milt. Par. Left.
The found
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volant touch Instinct through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and pass'd transferr'd the resonant fugue. Milton.
A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tubæ; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classic author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison on Italy.
9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.
The further a string is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note; for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all: and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.
10. The act of applying the stops in musick.
Th' organ-found a time survives the stops,
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel's Civil War.
11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.
Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been afraid to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Crashaw.
- STO'CK. n. f. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopp'd by a turning cock.

Stuck on a bank, and beaten by the flood. Dryden's Æneid.
I have seen of both those kinds from the sea, but few that they can only be such as have strayed from their main residence, and been accidentally intercepted and stranded by great storms. Woodward on Fishes.
Some from the stranded vessel force their way,
Fearful of fate they meet it in the sea;
Some who escape the fury of the waves,
Sicken on earth, and sink into a grave. Prior.
- STRANGE, adj. [from strange, French; extraneus, Latin.]
1. Foreign; of another country.
I do not condemn the knowledge of strange and divers tongues.
The natural subjects of the state should bear a sufficient proportion to the strange subjects that they govern. Bacon.
2. Not domestic.
As the man loves least at home to be,
That hath a fluttish house, haunted with spirits;
So he, impatient her own faults to see,
Turns from herself, and in strange things delights. Davies.
Wonderful; causing wonder.
It is evident, and it is one of the strangest secrets in fables, that the whole sound is not in the whole air only; but is also in every small part of the air.
Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me. Milton.

STR

- It is strange they should be so silent in this matter, when there were so many occasions to speak of it, if our Saviour had plainly appointed such an infallible judge of controversies. Tillotson.
- Strange* to relate, from young Iulus' head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fed. Dryden's Æneid.
Strange to relate, the flames, involv'd in smoke
Of incense, from the sacred altar broke. Dryden's Æneid.
Odd; irregular; not according to the common way.
Desire my man's abode, where I did leave him:
He's strange and peevish. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

- STRAPPADO, n. f. Chastisement by blows.
Were I at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Shakespeare.
- STRAPPING, adj. Vast; large; bulky. Used of large men or women in contempt. STRATA.

STR

STRATA. n. f. [The plural of stratum, Latin.] Beds; layers. A philosophical term.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata, or layers, placed one upon another; in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a fluid, will naturally be.

With how much wisdom are the strata laid,
Of different weight and of a different kind,
Of sundry forms for sundry ends design'd!

STRATAGEM. n. f. [stratagem, French.]
1. An artifice in war; a trick by which an enemy is deceived.

John Talbot, I did send for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war.

Should be the father of some stratagem.

2. An artifice; a trick by which some advantage is obtained.

Rouse up your courage, call up all your counsels,
And think on all those stratagems which nature
Keeps ready to encounter sudden dangers.

Nor is it Homer nods, but we who dream.

STRATIFY. v. a. [stratify, Fr. from stratum, Lat.] To range in beds or layers. A chymical term.

STRATUM. n. f. [Latin.] A bed; a layer. A term of philosophy.

Another was found in a perpendicular fissure of a stratum of stone in Langron iron-mine, Cumberland.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum, every way
The waters with the sandy stratum rise.

1. The stalk on which corn grows, and from which it is threshed.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion.

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;

Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

Apples in hay and straw ripened apparently; but the apple in the straw more.

My new straw hat, that's trimly lin'd with green,
Let Peggy wear.

More light he treads, more tall he seems to rise,
And trusts a straw breadth nearer to the skies.

2. Any thing proverbially worthless.

Thy arms, thy liberty, beside
All that's on th' outside of thy hide,
Are mine by military law,
Of which I will not bate one straw.

'Tis not a straw matter whether the main cause be right or wrong.

STRAWBERRY. n. f. [fragaria, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial fibrous root: the leaves are veined, growing upon each footstalk; the stalks trail upon the ground: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, divided into ten equal parts, and expands in form of a star: the flower consists, for the most part, of five leaves, expanded in form of a rose, and having many stamina in the middle, round the base of the ovary: the fruit is globose or oval, and consists of a fleshy cartilaginous pulp, full of protuberances. The species are seven.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality.

Content with food, which nature freely bled,
On wildings and on strawberries they feed.

Strawberries, by their fragrant smell, seem to be cordial: the seeds obtained by shaking the ripe fruit in winter, are an excellent remedy against the stone. The juice of strawberries and limmons in spring-water is an excellent drink in bilious fevers.

STRAWBERRY TREE. n. f. [arbutus, Latin.]

It is ever green, the leaves roundish and serrated on the edges: the flowers consist of one leaf, and shaped like a pitcher: the fruit is of a fleshy substance, and very like a strawberry; divided into five cells, which contain many small seeds.

Where Thames among the wanton valley strays.

Lo, the glad gales o'er all her beauties stray,
Breathe on her lips, and in her bosom play.

2. To rove out of the way; to range beyond the proper limits.

What grace hath thee now hither brought this way?
Or dost thy feeble feet unwitting hither stray?

No: where can I stray,
Save back to England? all the world's my way.

Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where the kneeling prayers
For happy wedlock hours.

Wand'ring thou within this lucid orb,
And stray'd from those fair fields of light above,
Amidst this new creation want it a guide
To reconduct thy steps?

3. To err; to deviate from the right.

We have erred and strayed.

STRAY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any creature wandering beyond its limits; any thing lost by wandering.

She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken and impounded as a stray.

The king of Scots.
Should I take you for a stray,
You must be kept a year and day.

When he has traced his talk through all its wild ramblings, let him bring home his stray; not like the lost sheep with joy,
but with tears of penitence.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray.
He cries out, neighbour, hast thou seen a stray?

Of bullocks and of heifers pass this way?

2. A stray of wandering.

I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate.

STREAK. n. f. [streak, Saxon; streak, Dutch; streak, Ital.] A line of colour different from that of the ground.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the late traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn.

What mean those colour'd streaks in heav'n,
Disended, as the brow of God appears?

The night comes on, we eager to pursue
Till the last streaks of dying day withdrew,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage deceive.

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear;
How ruddy, like your lips, their streaks appear!

While the fantastical tulip strives to break
In two-fold beauty, and a parted streak.

TO STREAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stripe; to variegate in hues; to dapple.

Mark what Jacob did;
When all the yearlings which were streak'd and pieb,
Should fall as Jacob's hire.

A mule, admirably streaked and dappled with white and black.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streaks the East,
With first approach of light we must be ris'n,
And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flow'ry arbours.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon azure sky:
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;

Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing fable for the peaceful night.

2. To stretch.

She lurks in midst of all her dens, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks;
Where, glotting round her rock, to fish the falls.

STREAKY. adj. [from streak.] Striped; variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in snow,
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The fits of falling snows appears the streaky green.

STREAM. n. f. [stream, Sax. stream, Islandick; stream, Dut.]

1. A running water; the course of running water; current.

As plays the fun upon the glassy stream,
T'winkling another counterfeited beam.

He brought stream out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and, being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather.

Thus from one common source our streams divide,
Ours is the Trojan, yours th' Arcadian hide.

Divided interests, while thou think'st it to ways,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away.

STR

2. Anything issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.

The breath of the Lord is like a stream of brimstone.

STREAMER. n. f. [from stream.] An ensign; a flag; a pennon; any thing flowing loosely from a flock.

His brave fleet
With silken streamers, the young Phœbus fanning.

The roly morn began to rise,
And wav'd her saffron streamer through the skies.

Brave Rupert from afar appears,
Whose waving streamers the glad general knows.

The man of sense his meat devours;
But only smells the peel and flow'rs:
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer.

STREAMY. adj. [from stream.]

1. Abounding in running water.

However streamy now, adust and dry,
Denn'd the goddess water: where deep Melas,
And rocky Cræta flow, the chariot smok'd Obscure with rising dust.

2. Flowing with a current.

Before him flaming his enormous shield,
Like the broad sun, illum'd all the field;
His nodding helm emits a streamy ray.

The streets are no larger than allies.

When night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine;
Witness the streets of Sodom.

The Italians lay the ancients always considered the situation of a building, whether it were high or low, in an open square, or in a narrow street, and more or less deviated from their rule of art.

When you tattle with some crony servant in the same street, leave your own street-door open.

2. Proverbially, a public place.

That there be no leading into captivity, and no complaining in our streets.

Our public ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-room.

Let us reflect upon what we daily see practised in the world, and can we believe, if an apostle of Christ appeared in our streets, he would retract his caution, and command us to be conformed to the world?

STREETWALKER. n. f. [street and walk.] A common prostitute that offers herself to sale in the open street.

STRENGTH. n. f. [strength, Saxon.]

1. Force; vigour; power of the body.

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
To wither'd, weak, and grey.

Th' insulting Trojan came,
And menac'd us with force, our feet with flame:
Was it the strength of this tongue-valiant lord,
In that black hour, that sav'd you from the sword?

This fiery speech inflames his fearful friends,

They tug at ev'ry oar, and ev'ry stretcher bends. Dryden.

To STREW. v. a. [The orthography of this word is doubtful: it is generally written strew, and I have followed custom; but Skinner likewise proposes strow, and Junius writes strow. Their reasons will appear in the word from which it may be derived. Strawen, Gothic; stroyen, Dutch; strecan, Sax. strewen, German; strewen, Danish. Perhaps strow is best, being that which reconciles etymology with pronunciation.]

1. To spread by being scattered.

The snow which does the top of Pindus strew,

Did never whiter shew. Spenser.

2. To scatter loosely.

The calf he burnt in the fire, ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made Israel drink of it. Ex.

With furies and nocturnal orgies fired,

Whom ev'n the savage beasts had spar'd, they kill'd,

And strew'd his mangled limbs about the field. Dryden.

STREWMENT. n. f. [from strew.] Any thing scattered in decoration.

Her death was doubtful. For charitable prayers,

Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;

Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chants,

Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home

Of bell and burial. Shaksp. Hamlet.

STRIFE. n. f. [Latin.] In natural history, the small channels in the shells of cockles and scallops.

The salt, leisurely permitted to shoot of itself in the liquor, exposed to the open air, did shoot into more fair crystalline strife, than those that were gained out of the remaining part of the same liquor by a more hasty evaporation. Boyle.

STRIFE. adj. [from strife, Latin; stris, French.] Formed in strife.

These effluvia fly by strifed atoms and winding particles, as Des Cartes conceiveth, or glide by streams attached from either pole unto the equator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Des Cartes imagines this earth once to have been a sun, and so the centre of a lesser vortex, whose axis still kept the same posture, by reason of the strife particles finding no fit pores for their passages, but only in this direction. Ray.

Crytal, when incorporated with the fibrous tales, shews, if broke, a strifed or fibrous texture, like those tales. Warton.

and an ungainly strut in their walk, have got preferment.
Swift.
STUB, n. f. [streb, Sax. Stubbe, Danish; stob, Dutch; stipes, Latin.]
1. A thick short stock left when the rest is cut off.
Dametas guided the horses to ill, that the wheel coming over a great stub of a tree, overturned the coach. Sidney.
All about, old stocks and stubs of trees,
Whereon nor fruit nor leaf was ever seen,
Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees. Fairy Queen.
To buy at the stub is the best for the buyer,
More timely provision, the cheaper is fire. Tusser.
Upon cutting down of an old timber tree, the stub hath put out sometimes a tree of another kind. Bacon's Nat. History.
We here
Live on tough roots and stubs, to thirst inur'd,
Men to much misery and hardships born. Milton.
Trickly stubs instead of trees are found,
Cr woods with knots and knares deform'd and old;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryd. Knights Tale.
2. A log; a block.
You shall have more ado to drive our dullest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to haul our choicest wits to that asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles. Milton.
To STUB, v. a. [from the noun.] To force up; to extirpate.
His two tulks serve for fighting and feeding; by the help whereof he stubs up edible roots out of the ground, or tears off the bark of trees. Grew's Museum.

not sufficiently concocted by circulation, and is commonly sub-acid in all plants. Arbutnot on Aliment.

SUBACRID. adj. [from sub and acridus, Latin.] Sharp and pungent in a small degree.

The green choler of a cow tasted sweet, bitter, subacrid, or a little pungent, and turned syrup of violets green. Flyer.

To SUBACT. v. a. [from subactus, Latin.] To reduce; to subdue.
Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

SUBACTION. n. f. [from subactus, Latin.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.

There are of concoction two periods: the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subaction; the other maturation; whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body. Bacon's Natural History.

SUBALTERN. adj. [from subalternus, French.] Inferior; subordinate; that which in different respects is both superior and inferior. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.

There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth. Add.

Love's subalterns, a duteous band,
Like watchmen round their chief appear;
Each had his lantern in his hand,
And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear. Prior.

One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet after he received his commission for a regiment, he confessed the spirit of colonelship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death. Swift.

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern. Watt.

der, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle. Quincy.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the sub-clavian division, doth equi-distantly communicate its activity unto either arm. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs. Art.

SUBCONSTELLATION. n. f. [from sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby be meant the pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SUBCONTRARY. adj. [from sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferior degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are subcontraries; as, some vine is a tree: some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false. Watt.

SUBCONTRACTED. part. adj. [from sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

SUB

SUBCONTRACTED. part. adj. [from sub and contracted.] Contracted part of ten.

SUBDERISORIOUS. adj. [from sub and derisorius.] Scoffing or ridi-culing with tenderness and delicacy.

This subderisorous mirth is far from giving any offence to us:
it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation. Morse.

SUBDITITIOUS. adj. [from subditi, Latin.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

To SUBDIVERSIFY. v. a. [from sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.

The same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into arras; and these variously subdiversify
according to the fancy of the artificer. Hale.

To SUBDIVIDE. v. a. [from subdividere, French; sub and divide.]
To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the life of eight, in tones, there be two beemols, or half notes; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the strops of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen. Bacon's Nat. History.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after An-tonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided. Bacon.

The glad father glories in his child,
When he can subdivide a fraction. Roscommon.

When the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity. Dryden.

SUBDIVISION. n. f. [from subdivisio, French; from subdivide.]
1. The act of subdividing.

When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision; as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be further subdivided into minutes and seconds. Watt's Logic.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.
How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under so many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one? Addison.

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit. Arbutnot.

SUBDOLOUS. adj. [from subdolosus, Latin.] Cunning; subtle; sly.

To SUBDUCE. v. a. [from subducere, Latin.]
To SUBDUCE. v. a. [from subducere, Latin.]

1. To withdraw; to take away.
Or nature fail'd in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain;
Or from my side subducing, took perhaps More than enough. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To subtract by arithmetical operation.
Take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction: if out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite. Hale.

SUBDUCTION. n. f. [from subducere.]
1. The act of taking away.

Possibly the Divine Beneficence subducing that influence, which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality 'till that moment of the subduction. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Arithmetical subtraction.
Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction: if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduct ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite. Hale.

To SUBDUCE. v. a. [from subducere, or subducere, Latin.]
1. To crush; to oppress; to sink; to overpower.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowliness, but his unkind daughters. Shakefear.

Them that rose up against me, hast thou subdu'd under me.
2 Sa. xxii. 40. Milton.

If aught were worthy to subduce
The soul of man.

2. To conquer; to reduce under a new dominion.
Be fruitful, and replenish the earth, and subduce it. Gen. i. 28.

SUB

Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire. Peach.
To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils. Milton.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Spenser.

3. To tame; to subact.
Nor is't unwholesome to subdue the land
By often exercise; and where before
You broke the earth, again to plow. Mar's Virgil.

SUBDU'EMENT. n. f. [from subducere.] Conquest. A word not used, nor worthy to be used.

I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Bravely despoiling foetics and subdu'ement. Shakefear.

SUBDU'ER. n. f. [from subducere.] Conquerour; tamer.
Great god of might, that reignest in the mind,
And all the body to thy heft do'st frame;
Victor of gods, subducere of mankind,
That do'st the lions and fell tyers tame,
Who can expels the glory of thy might? Spenser.

Their curious eye
Discerns their great subducer's awful mien
And corresponding features fair. Philips.

Figs are great subducers of acrimony, useful in hoarseness and coughs, and extremely emollient. Arbutnot.

SUBDU'PLE. adj. [from subduplus, Fr. sub and duplus, Latin.]
SUBDUPLICATE. adj. [from subduplus, Fr. sub and duplus, Latin.]

Contains one part of two.
As one of these under subduples doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be in a subduplex proportion unto it, so two of them do abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, and three a subsextuple. Wilkins's Math. A. ar.

The motion generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplex te proportion of the forces. Newton's Opt.

SUBJACENT. adj. [from subjacens, Latin.] Lying under.
The superficial parts of rocks and mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains. Wood.

To SUBJECT. v. a. [from subjactus, Latin.]
1. To put under.

The angel led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
To the subjected plain. Adison.

The medal bears each form and name:
In one short view, subjected to our eye,
Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties lie. Pope.

2. To reduce to submission; to make subordinate; to make submissive.

Think not, young warriors, your diminish'd name
Shall lose of lustre, by subjecting rage
To the cool dictates of experience'd age. Dryden.

3. To enslave; to make obnoxious.
I live on bread like you, feel want like you,
Taste grief, need friends, like you. Subjected thus,
How can you say to me, I am a king? Shakef. Rich. II.

I see thee, in that fatal hour,
Subjected to the victor's cruel pow'r,
Led hence a slave. Dryden.

The blind will always be led by those that see, or fall into the ditch: and he is the most subjected, the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

4. To expose; to make liable.
If the vessels yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniences of an erroneous circulation. Arbutnot.

5. To submit; to make accountable.
God is not bound to subject his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts, and confine himself to do nothing but what we must comprehend. Locke.

6. To make subservient.
Subjected to his service angel-wings. Milton.

SUBJECT. adj. [from subjactus, Latin.]
1. Placed or situated under.

Th' eastern tower,
Whose height commands, as subject, all the vale
To see the fight. Shakef. Troilus and C. effida.

2. Living under the dominion of another.
Esau was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself prince over them. Locke.

3. Exposed; liable; obnoxious.
Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
And he the noble image of my youth
Is overpread with them. Shakefear.

All human things are subject to decay,
And when fate summons, monarchs must obey. Dryden.

4. Being that on which any action operates, whether intellectual or material.

I enter into the subject matter of my discourse. Dryden.

SUBJECT. n. f. [from subjactus, Latin.]
1. One who lives under the dominion of another.

Every subject's duty is the king's,
But every subject's soul is his own. Shakefear's Henry V.

Never subject long'd to be a king,
As I do long and wish to be a subject. Shakef. Henry VI.

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, human laws require it. Swift.
Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistrates of the sovereign. Davies.

Were subjects so but only by their choice,
And not from birth did force'd dominion take,
Our prince alone would have the publick voice. Dryden.
2. That on which any operation either mental or material is performed.

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn, and near approaches
The subject of our watch. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
This subject for heroic song pleas'd me. Milton.
Here he would have us fix our thoughts; nor are they too dry a subject for our contemplation. Deacy of Piety.
I will not venture on so nice a subject with my feverish style. More.

Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which being capable of all the graces that colours, and elegance of design can give, shall afford a perfect art, an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate. Dryden.

The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied. Watts's Logic.

My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.

3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.
Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects, in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks. Bacon.

4. [In Grammar.] The nominative case to a verb, is called by Grammarians the subject of the verb. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

SUBJECT. n. f. [from subject.] Clarke's Lat. Gram.
1. The act of subduing.

After the conquest of the kingdom and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were that fighting against the king had saved themselves by flight. Hale.

2. [Subjection, Fr.] The state of being under government.
Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary; we therefore stand in need of direction after what fort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hooker.

How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that having once set before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found one's engagement. Spenser.

Both in subjection now to sensual appetite. Milton.
SUBJECTIVE. adj. [from subject.] Relating not to the object but the subject.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

SUBINGRESSION. n. f. [from sub and ingressus, Latin.] Secret entrance.

The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which, forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subingression of its parts. Boyle.
TO SUBJOIN. v. a. [from sub and joine, French; subjungo, Latin.] To add at the end; to add afterwards.

He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and subjoins a reason. Saunders's Sermons.

SUBJUGATE. v. a. [from sub and jugare, Latin.] To conquer; to subdue; to bring under dominion by force.

O fair virgin that hast warm'd the breast,
Whole sov'reign dictates subjugate the east! Prior.
He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.

SUBJUGATION. n. f. [from subjugate.] The act of subduing. This was the condition of the learned part of the world, after their subjugation by the Turks. Hale.

SUBJUNCTION. n. f. [from subjungo, Latin.] The state of being subjoined; the act of subjoining.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation; and in dependence upon, or subjunction to some other verb. Clarke.
SUBJUNCTIVE. adj. [from subjunctus, Latin; subjunctus, Fr.] 1. Subjoined to something else.

2. [In Grammar.]

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation, to signify the same intentions as the indicative, yet not absolutely but relatively to some other verb, which is called the subjunctive mood. Clarke.

SUBLAPARY. adj. [from sub and lappus, Latin.] Done after the fall of man.

SUBLATION. n. f. [from sublatio, Latin.] The act of taking away. SUBLAVATION. n. f. [from sublevo, Latin.] The act of raising on high.

SUBLIMABLE. adj. [from sublimare.] Possible to be sublimed.

SUBLIMABLENESS. n. f. [from sublimabile.] Quality of admitting sublimation.

He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and easy sublimableness, as common salt armoniac. Boyle.

SUBLIMATE. n. f. [from sublimare.]

1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.
Enquire the manner of subliming, and what metals endure subliming, and what body the sublimata makes. Bacon.
2. Quicksilver raised in the retort. Dryden's Duff's Journey.

The particles of mercury uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt compose mercury sublimata; and with the particles of sulphur, cinnabar. Newton's Opticks.

TO SUBLIMATE. v. a. [from sublimare.]

1. To raise by the force of chemical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.

Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aerial and sublimated are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Decay of Piety.

The precepts of Christianity are so excellent and refined, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as shews flesh and blood never revealed it. Decay of Piety.

SUBLIMATION. n. f. [from sublimare, Fr. from sublimare.]

1. A chemical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation, only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed being solid are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Seign.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation or sublimation; that is a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon's Natural History.

Since oil of sulphur per campanam is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation. Newton's Opt.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns
Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Decker.

Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality? South.

SUBLIME. adj. [from sublimis, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They fum'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime. Milton.
With clang despis'd the ground.

Set time on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tiphone there keeps the ward. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly frained to the height
In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton.

Can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime;
And that the generous mind releas'd by death,
Can cover lazy limbs? Dryden.

3. High in file or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy in file, they work in sense sublime. Prior.

4. Elevated by joy.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n-fall'n, in station stood or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton.

Their hearts were jocund and sublime,
Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine. Milton.

5. Haughty; proud.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures. Swift.

SUBLIME. n. f. The grand or lofty stile. The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Adams.

TO SUBLIME. v. a. [from sublimare, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chemical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me, Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Denham.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not hept, itself sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb. Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flow'rs, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd. Milton.

To vital spirits aspire.
The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which even in the most sublim'd intellectual is dangerously influential. Clarke.

4. To raise by a chemical fire.

Art being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by flow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius which is capable of distinguishing between the beauties of nature and that which is low in her. Dryden's Duff's Journey.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine;
Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

TO SUBLIME. v. n. To rise in the chemical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniac in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newton's Opt.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBLIMELY. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.

This fustian's so sublimely bad; Pope.

It is not poetry, but prose run mad. Pope.

SUBLIMITY. n. f. [from sublimis, Latin; Fr. sublimitas, Lat.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellence which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hooker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind, nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned. Releigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.

Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLINGUAL. adj. [from sublingual, French; sub and lingua, Lat.]

Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills. Harvey on Consumption.

SUBLUNAR. adj. [from sublunaris, Fr. sub and luna, Latin.]

SUBLUNARY. n. f. [from sublunaris, Fr. sub and luna, Latin.] Situated beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers, love,
Whole soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

Night meadur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunary vault. Milton.

Through seas of knowledge we our course advance,
Discover still new worlds of ignorance;
And these discoveries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess. Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon being not subject to chance, remained in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change. Dryden's Duff's Journey.

Ovid had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies. Swift.

SUBMARINE. adj. [from sub and mare.] Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the fight of the heavens for direction. Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophyta affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals. Ray on the Creation.

TO SUBMERGE. v. a. [from submergo, Fr. sub and mergo, Lat.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt were submerged and made A cistern for scald snakes. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

SUBMERION. n. f. [from submergo, Fr. from submergo, Latin.]

The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantic island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean: which if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submergion. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO SUBMINISTER. v. a. [from subministro, Latin.] To supply.

TO SUBMINISTRATE. v. n. To supply. A word not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministrated unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than teams of nasty folks. Harvey.

TO SUBMINISTER. v. n. To subserve.

Our passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst of purposes. L'Esrange.

SUBMISS. adj. [from submittere, Lat.] Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James mollified by the bishop's submiss, and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spoke with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature, bowed low. Milton's Par. Lost.

Rejoicing, but with awe,
In adorati'n at his feet I fell Submiss: he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMISS. n. f. [from submittere, Lat.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.

Submissio, Dauphin! 'tis a meer French word,
We English warriors wot not what it means. Shakespeare.

2. Acknowledgement of inferiority or dependance; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submissio and humility,
York doth present himself unto your highness. Shakespeare.

Great prince, by that submissio you'll gain more Than e'er your haughty courage won before. Halifax.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of error.

Be not as extreme in submissio, as in offence. Shakespeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty than a perfect submissio to his will in all things. Temple.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [from submittere, Lat.] Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent? Shakespeare.

Her at his feet submissive in distress
He thus with peaceful words uprais'd. Milton.

Sudden from the golden throne,
With a submissive step I halled down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took;
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submissive.] Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddesses,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies. Dryden's Æneid.

Speech ev'n there submissively withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;
Then pious silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. f. [from submissive.] Humility; confession of fault, or inferiority.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fratily gets pardon by submissive ease,
But he that boasts, thrusts that out of his story:
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submissive.] Humbly; with submission.

Humility conflicts, not in wearing mean cloaths, and going softly and submissively, but in hearty mean opinion of thy self. Taylor.

TO SUBMIT. v. a. [from submittere, Fr. submittere, Latin.]

1. To let down; to sink.

Sometimes the hill submit itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile,
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders, but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune flood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the sand. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

Return to thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands. Gen. xvi. 9.

Will ye submit your neck, and chuse to bend
The supple knee? Milton.

3. To leave to discretion; to refer to judgment.

Whether the condition of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house. Swift.

TO SUBMIT. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will Thine shall submit: he over thee shall rule. Milton.

Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasure, but to submit to pain, affliction, disgrace, and even death. Rogers's Sermons.

SUBMULTIPLE. n. f. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number, a certain number of times exactly: thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly. Harris.

SUBOCTAVE. adj. [from sub and octava, Lat. and sub, Lat.] Containing one part of eight.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness of the weight, and causes the power to be in a subduplex proportion, so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a subseptuple, four a subdecuple. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congrus, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congrus into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly larly the cube of a quarter foot, their well-known palm: this is the ounce taken for our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave. Arbutnot on Coins.

SUBORDINACY. n. f. [from subordinatus.] Subordinacy is the subordination. } proper and analogical word.

1. The state of being subject.
Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagancies, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordination to reason. Spektor.

2. Series of subordination.
The subordinacy of the government changing hands so often, makes an unsteadiness in the pursuit of the public interests. Temple.

SUBORDINATE. adj. [from subordinatus, Latin.]

1. Inferior in order; in nature; in dignity or power.
It was subordinate, not enslaved to the understanding; not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, and yet retains a majesty. South's Sermons.

Whether dark prefaces of the night proceed from any latent power of the soul, during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute. Addison.

2. Descending in a regular series.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather courtiers than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience. Bacon.

His next subordinate

Awaken, thus to him in secret spake. Milton.
These carry such plain characters of disagreement or affinity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of each are easily distinguished. Woodward.

TO SUBORDINATE. v. a. [from subordinatus, Latin.] To range under another. Not in use, but proper and elegant.

If I have subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture as their mistress, so there are other inferior arts subordinate to them. Watson.

SUBORDINATELY. adv. [from subordinate.] In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of ill, to which all others subordinately tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement. Dryden.

SUBORDINATION. n. f. [from subordinatus, Latin.]

1. The state of being inferior to another.

Nor can a council national decide,
But with subordination to her guide. Dryden.

2. A series regularly descending.

If we would suppose a ministry, where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in chusing persons, who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of irreligion would be soon destroyed. Swift.

TO SUBORN. v. a. [from subornatus, Latin.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom his accusers were suborned. Hooker.

Fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour

In hateful practice. Shakespeare.

Reason may meet

Some specious object, by the foe suborn'd;

And fall into deception. Milton.

His artful bosom heaves dissembled sighs;

And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes;

To procure by indirect means. Prior.

Behold

Those who by ling'ring sickness lose their breath,

And those who by despair suborn their death. Dryden.

SUBORNATION. n. f. [from subornatus, Latin.] The crime of procuring any to do a bad action.

Thomas earl of Desmond was, through false subornation of the Queen of Edward IV. brought to his death at Tredagh most unjustly. Spenser's Ireland.

You set the crown

Upon the head of this forgetful man,

And for his sake wear the detected blot

Of murderous subornation. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The fear of punishment in this life will preserve men from few vices, since some of the blackest often prove the surest steps to favour; such as ingratitude, hypocrisy, treachery, and subornation. Swift.

SUBORNER. n. f. [from subornatus, Latin.] One that procures a bad action to be done.

SUBORNAGE. n. f. [from subornatus, Latin.] A writ commanding attendance in a court under a penalty.

SUBQUADRUPLE. adj. [from subquadruplus, Latin.] Containing one part of four.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness

the weight hath in itself, and causes the power to be in a subduplicate proportion unto it, so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

SUB

SUBQUINTUPLE. adj. [from subquintuplus, Latin.] Containing one part of five.

If unto the lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

SUBRECTOR. n. f. [from subrector, Latin.] The rector's vicegerent.

He was chosen subrektor of the college. Watson.

SUBREPTION. n. f. [from subreptio, Latin.] The act of obtaining a favour by surprise or unfair representation. Dist.

SUBREPTIOUS. adj. [from subreptio, Latin.]

Fraudulently obtained from a superior, by concealing some truth, which, if known, would have prevented the grant. Bailey.

TO SUBSCRIBE. v. a. [from subscribere, Latin.]

1. To give consent to, by underwriting the name.

They united by subscribing a covenant, which they pretended to be no other than had been subscribed in the reign of King James, and that his Majesty himself had subscribed it;

by which imposition people of all degrees engaged themselves in it. Clarendon.

The reader sees the names of those persons by whom this letter is subscribed. Addison.

2. To attest by writing the name.

Their particular testimony ought to be better credited, than some other subscribed with an hundred hands. White.

3. To contract; to limit. Not used.

The king gone to night! subscrib'd his pow'r!

Confin'd to exhibition! all is gone. Shakespeare.

TO SUBSCRIBE. v. n.

1. To give consent.

Onus, with whose hand the Nicene creed was set down, and framed for the whole Christian world to subscribe unto,

so far yielded in the end, as even with the same hand to ratify the Arrians confession. Hooker.

Advise thee what is to be done,

And we will all subscribe to thy advice. Shakespeare.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou should'st have said, go porter, turn the key,

All cruels else subscrib'd. Shakespeare's King Lear.

So spake much humbled Eve; but late subscrib'd not: nature first gave signs, impress'd

On bird, beast, air. Milton's Parad. Lost.

2. To promise a stipulated sum for the promotion of any undertaking.

SUBSCRIBER. n. f. [from subscriptio, Latin.]

1. One who subscribes.

Let a pamphlet come out upon a demand in a proper juncture, every one of the party who can spare a shilling shall be a subscriber. Swift.

SUBSCRIPTION. n. f. [from subscriptio, Latin.]

1. Any thing underwritten.

The man asked, are ye Christians? We answered we were;

fearing the less because of the cross we had seen in the sub- scription. Bacon.

2. Consent or attestation given by underwriting the name.

3. The act or state of contributing to any undertaking.

The work he ply'd;

Stocks and subscriptions pour on ev'ry side. Pope.

South-sea subscriptions take who please,

Leave me but liberty. Pope.

4. Submission; obedience. Not in use.

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;

I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children,

You owe me no subscription. Shakespeare's King Lear.

SUBSECTION. n. f. [from subsectio, Latin.] A subdivision of a larger section into a lesser. A section of a section. Dist.

SUBSEQUENCE. n. f. [from subsequor, Latin.] The state of and subsequence in which they are past. Grew.

SUBSECUVE. adj. [from subsequor, Latin.] Following in train.

SUBSEPTUPL. adj. [from subseptuplus, Latin.] Containing one of seven parts.

If unto this lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subseptuple proportion; if a third, a subseptuple. Wilkins.

SUBSEQUENT. adj. [from subsequent, Latin.]

This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakespeare. } Following in train; not preceding.

In such indexes, although small pricks

To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant masts

Of things to come, at large. Shakespeare, Treil. and Crispin.

The subsequent words come on before the precedent vanith. Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign

With prudent harmony combine

In turns to move, and subsequent appear

To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior.

SUB

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Swift.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends;

but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by postliminious after-applications of them to their purposes. South's Sermons.

TO SUBSERVE. v. a. [from subservio, Latin.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,

But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walsh.

SUBSERVIENT. n. f. [from subservio.] Instrumental finess subservient. } or use.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning, carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subservient to the designs of a good angel. Dryden.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much finess, use, and subservient to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance. Bentley.

There is an immediate and agill subservient of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

There is a regular subordination and subservient among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [from subservio, Latin.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them servicable to man. Roy.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members or parts, and they are his creatures subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton's Opticks.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art,

Still make the whole depend upon a part;

They talk of principles, but notions prize,

And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSEXTUPLE. adj. [from subsextuplus, Latin.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduplicate proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

TO SUBSIDUE. v. n. [from subsiduo, Latin.] To sink; to tend downwards.

He shook the sacred honours of his head

With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hills,

And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,

Weights the mens wits against the lady's hair;

The doubtful beam long nods from side to side:

At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside. Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. n. f. [from subside.] The act of sinking; ten-subsidence. } dency downward.

This gradual subsidence of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air-bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbutnot.

SUBSIDARY. adj. [from subsidiarius, Latin.]

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.
O blessed! blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream;
Too flattering sweet to be substantial.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life.
If happiness be a substantial good,
Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,
I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge.
Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immerged.
The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue.
Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy.
A solid and substantial greatness of soul, looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude.
3. Corporeal; material.
Now shine these planets with substantial rays?
Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days?
The sun appears flat like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky, all which are gross falshoods.
4. Strong; stout; bulky.
Substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault.
5. Responsible; moderately wealthy.
Trials of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freeholders.
The merchants, and substantial citizens, cannot make up more than a hundred thousand families.
SUBSTANTIALS, n. f. [Without singular.] Essential parts.
Although a custom introduced against the substantial of an appeal be not valid, as that it should not be appealed to a superior, but to an inferior judge, yet a custom may be introduced against the accidentals of an appeal.
SUBSTANTIALITY, n. f. [from substantial.]
1. The state of real existence.
2. Corporeity; materiality.
Body cannot act on any thing but by motion; motion cannot be received but by quantity and matter: the soul is a stranger to such gross substantiality, and owns nothing of these.
SUBSTANTIALLY, adv. [from substantial.]
1. In manner of a substance; with reality of existence.
In him his Father shone substantially express'd.
2. Strongly; solidly.
Having so substantially provided for the North, they promised themselves they should end the war that Summer.
3. Truly; solidly; really; with fixed purpose.
The laws of this religion would make men, if they would truly observe them, substantially religious towards God, chaste and temperate.
4. With competent wealth.
SUBSTANTIALNESS, n. f. [from substantial.]
1. The state of being substantial.
2. Firmness; strength; power of holding or lasting.
When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, fulness with fineness, how can the language which consisteth of these found other than most full of sweetness?
In degree of substantialness next above the doricque, sustaining the third, and adorning the second story.
To SUBSTANTIATE, v. a. [from substantia.] To make to exist.
The accidental of any act is said to be whatever advenes to the act itself already substantiated.
SUBSTANTIVE, n. f. [from substantivus, French; substantivum, Latin.]
A noun betokening the thing, not a quality.
Claudian perpetually clothes his sense at the end of a verse, commonly called golden, or two substantives and two adjectives with a verb betwixt them.
SUBSTANTIVE, adj. [from substantivus, Latin.]
1. Solid; depending only on itself. Not in use.
He considered how sufficient and substantive this land was to maintain itself, without any aid of the foreigner.
2. Betokening existence.
One is obliged to join many particulars in one proposition, because the repetition of the substantive verb would be tedious.
To SUBSTITUTE, v. a. [from substitutus, Fr. substitutus, from sub and stitus, Latin.] To put in the place of another.
In the original designs of speaking, a man can substitute none for them that can equally conduce to his honour.
If a swarthy tongue
Is underneath his humid palate hung,
Reject him and substitute another.
Some few verses are inserted or substituted in the room of others.
SUBSTITUTE, n. f. [from substitutus, Fr. from the verb.] One placed by another to act with delegated power.

SUB

- Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?
—To him and his substitutes.
You've taken up,
Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father,
And here upwarm'd them.
Hast thou not made me here thy substitute,
And these inferior far beneath me set?
Providence delegates to the supreme magistrate the same power for the good of men, which that supreme magistrate transfers to those several substitutes who act under him.
SUBSTITUTION, n. f. [from substitutio, Fr. from substituo.] The act of placing any person or thing in the room of another; the state of being placed in the room of another.
He did believe
He was the duke, from substitution,
And executing th' outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative.
Nor fal, sulphur, or mercury can be separated from any perfect metals; for every part, so separated, may easily be reduced into perfect metal without substitution of that which chemists imagine to be wanting.
To SUBSTRATE, v. a. [from substratus, Lat. substratus, French.]
1. To take away part from the whole.
2. To take one number from another.
SUBSTRATION, n. f. [from substratio, French.]
1. The act of taking away part from the whole.
I cannot call this piece Tully's nor my own, being much altered not only by the change of the style, but by addition and subtraction.
2. [In arithmetic.] The taking of a lesser number out of a greater of like kind, whereby to find out a third number, being or declaring the inequality, excess, or difference between the numbers given.
SUBSTRATION, n. f. [from substratio, from sub and stratus, Latin.] Underbuilding.
To found our habitation firmly, examine the bed of earth upon which we build, and then the underfillings, or substration, as the ancients call it.
SUBSTYLER, adj. [from substylus, Latin.] Substylar line is, in dialing, a right line, whereon the gnomon or style of a dial is erected at right angles with the plane.
Erect the style perpendicularly over the substylar line, so as to make an angle with the dial-plane equal to the elevation of the pole of your place.
SUBSULTIVE, adj. [from subsultus, Latin.] Bounding; moving SUBSULTORY, adj. [from subsultus.] In a bounding manner.
The spirits spread even, and move not subsultory; for that will make the parts close and pliant.
SUBTANGENT, n. f. In any curve, is the line which determines the intersection of the tangent in the axis prolonged.
To SUBTEND, v. a. [from subtendo, Latin.] To be extended under.
In rectangles and triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle.
From Aries rightways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle: now since the lines
Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs,
Where'er they meet in angles, those are trines.
SUBTENSE, n. f. [from subtensus, Latin.] The chord of an arch; that which is extended under any thing.
SUBTERR, [Latin.] In composition, signifies under.
SUBTERRFLUENT, adj. [from subterrfluo, Latin.] Running under.
SUBTERRFLUOUS, adj. [from subterrfluo, Latin.]
SUBTERRUGES, n. f. [from subterruges, French; subter and fugis, Lat.]
A shift; an evasion; a trick.
The king cared not for subterfuges, but would stand envy, and appear in any thing that was to his mind.
Notwithstanding all their fly subterfuges and studied evasions, yet the product of all their endeavours is but as the birth of the labouring mountains, wind and emptiness.
Affect not little shifts and subterfuges to avoid the force of an argument.
SUBTERRANEAL, adj. [from sub and terra, Lat. subterraneus, Fr. subterranean, or subterraneous is the word now used.] Lying under the earth; placed below the surface.
Metals are wholly subterranean, whereas plants are part above earth, and part under.
In subterraneities, as the fathers of their tribes, are brimstone and mercury.
The force
Of subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pelorus, or the shatter'd side
Of thund'ring Ætna, whose combustible
And fuel'd entrails thence conceiving fires,
Sublim'd with mineral fury, aid the winds.

SUB

- Alteration proceeded from the change made in the neighbouring subterranean parts by that great conflagration.
Tell by what paths, what subterranean ways,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluent rivers.
Let my soft minutes glide obscurely on,
Like subterraneous streams, unheard, unknown.
This subterraneous passage was not at first designed so much for a highway as for a quarry.
Rous'd within the subterranean world,
Th' expanding earthquake unresisted shakes
Aspiring cities.
SUBTERRANEITY, n. f. [from sub and terra, Lat.] A place under ground. Not in use.
We commonly consider subterraneities, not in contempla-tions, sufficiently respective unto the creation.
SUBTILE, adj. [from subtilis, Lat. subtilis, Lat.] This word is often written subtle.
1. Thin; not dense; not gross.
From his eyes the fleeting fair
Retir'd, like subtle smoke dissolv'd in air.
Deny Des Cart his subtle matter,
You leave him neither fire nor water.
Is not the heat conveyed through the vacuum by the vibrations of a much subtiler medium than air, which, after the air was drawn out, remained in the vacuum?
2. Nice; fine; delicate; not coarse.
But of the clock which in our breasts we bear,
The subtle motions we forget the while.
Thou only know'st her nature, and her pow'rs;
Her subtle form thou only canst define.
Each subtle line of her immortal face.
3. Piercing; acute.
Pals we the slow disease and subtle pain,
Which our weak frame is destin'd to sustain;
The cruel stone, the cold catarrh.
4. Cunning; artful; sly; subdulous. In this sense it is now commonly written subtle.
Atticus, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a subtle witted and a marvellous fair spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction.
Think you this York
Was not incensed by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you?
O subtle love, a thousand wiles thou hast
By humble suit, by service, or by hire,
To win a maiden's hold.
A woman, an harlot and subtle of heart.
Nor thou his malice, and false guile, content:
Subtle he needs must be, who could seduce
Angels.
5. Deceitful.
Like a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I've tumbled past the throw.
6. Refined; acute beyond exactness.
Things remote from use, obscure and subtle.
SUBTILLY, adv. [from subtile.]
1. Finely; not grossly.
The constitution of the air appeareth more subtilly by worms in oak-apples than to the sense of man.
In these plasters the stone should not be too subtilly powdered; for it will better manifest its attraction in more sensible dimensions.
The opaque bodies, if subtilly divided, as metals dissolved in acid menstruums, become perfectly transparent.
2. Artfully; cunningly.
By granting this, add the reputation of loving the truth sincerely to that of having been able to oppose it subtilly.
Others have fought to ease themselves of affliction by disputing subtilly against it, and pertinaciously maintaining that afflictions are no real evils.
SUBTILENESS, n. f. [from subtile.]
1. Fineness; rareness.
2. Cunning; artfulness.
To SUBTILIZE, v. a. [from subtile.] To make thin.
A very dry and warm or subtilizing air opens the surface of the earth.
SUBTILIZATION, n. f. [from subtilization, French; from subtilizare.]
The act of making thin.
By subtilization and rarefaction the oil contained in grapes,
if distilled before it be fermented, becomes spirit of wine.
SUBTILITY, n. f. [from subtilitas, French; from subtile.]
1. Thinness; fineness; exility of parts.
The subtilities of particular sounds may pass through small crannies not confuted, but its magnity not so well.
How shall we this union well express?
Nought ties the soul, her subtilty is such.
The corporeity of all bodies being the same, and subtilty in all bodies being essentially the same thing, could any body by

SUB

- subtily become vital, then any degree of subtilty would produce some degree of life.
Bodies the more of kin they are to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more spreading and self-diffusive are they.
2. Nicety.
Whatsoever is invisible, in respect of the fineness of the body, or subtilty of the motion, is little enquired.
3. Refinement; too much acuteness.
You prefer the reputation of candour before that of subtily.
Intelligible discourses are spoiled by too much subtilty in nice divisions.
Greece did at length a learned race produce,
Who needful science mock'd, and arts of use;
Mankind with idle subtilties embroil,
And fashion systems with romantick toil.
They give method, and shed subtilty upon their author.
4. Cunning; artifice; slyness.
Finding force now faint to be,
He thought grey hairs afforded subtilty.
The rudeness and barbarity of savage Indians knows not so perfectly to hate all virtues as some mens subtilty.
Sleights proceeding
As from his wit and native subtilty.
SUBTILIZATION, n. f. [from subtilizare.]
1. Subtilization is making any thing so volatile as to rise readily in steam or vapour.
Fluids have their resistances proportional to their densities, so that no subtilization, division of parts, or refining can alter these resistances.
2. Refinement; superfluous acuteness.
To SUBTILIZE, v. a. [from subtilizer, French; from subtile.]
1. To make thin; to make less gross or coarse.
Chyle, being mixed with the choler and pancreatic juices, is further subtilized, and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the thinner and finer part easily finds way in at the freight orifices of the lacteous veins.
Body cannot be vital; for if it be, then is it so either as subtilized or organized, moved or endowed with life.
2. To refine; to spin into useless niceties.
The most obvious verity is subtilized into niceties, and spun into a thread indiscernible by common optics.
To SUBTILIZE, v. n. To talk with too much refinement.
Qualities and moods some modern philosophers have sub-tilized on.
SUBTILE, adj. [Written often for subtle, especially in the sense of cunning.] Sly; artful; cunning.
Some subtle headed fellow will put some quirk, or devise some evasion, whereof the rest will take hold.
Shall we think the subtle witted French
Confessers and forefathers, that, afraid of him,
By magick verse have thus contriv'd his end?
The serpent, subtillest beast of all the field.
The Arabians were men of a deep and subtle wit.
SUBTILY, adv. [from subtile.]
1. Slyly; artfully; cunningly.
Thou see'st how subtilly to detain thee I devise;
Inviting thee to hear, while I relate.
2. Nicely; delicately.
In the nice bee, what sense so subtilly true,
From pois'nous herbs extracts the healing dew!
To SUBTRACT, v. a. [from subtrahere, Latin.] They who derive it from the Latin write subtrahere; those who know the French original, write subtrahere, which is the common word. To withdraw part from the rest.
Reducing many things unto charge, which, by confusion, became concealed and subtrahed from the crown.
What is subtrahed or subducted out of the extent of the divine perfection, leaves still a quotient infinite.
The same swallow, by the subtrahing daily of her eggs,
lay nineteen successively, and then gave over.
SUBTRACTION, n. f. See SUBTRACTION.
SUBTRAHEND, n. f. [from subtrahendum, Lat.] The number to be taken from a larger number.
SUBTRIPL, adj. [from subtriplex, Fr. sub and triplex, Latin.] Containing a third or one part of three.
The power will be in a subtriplex proportion to the weight.
SUBVENTANEUS, adj. [from subventaneus, Lat.] Addle; windy.
Suitable unto the relation of the mares in Spain, and their subventaneus conceptions from the western wind.
To SUBVERSE, v. a. [from subversus, Latin.] To subvert.
Empires subvers'd, when ruling fate has struck
Th' unalterable hour.
SUBVERSION, n. f. [from subversio, Fr. subversus, Latin.] Overthrow; ruin; destruction.
These seek subversion of thy harmless life.
It is far more honourable to suffer, than to prosper in their ruin and subversion.
These things refer to the opening and shutting the abyss, with the dissolution or subversion of the earth.

SUC

Laws have been often abused, to the oppression and the subversion of that order they were intended to preserve. Rogers.
SUBVERSIVE. adj. [from subvert.] Having tendency to overturn.

Lying is a vice subversive of the very ends and design of conversation. Rogers.
TO SUBVERT. v. a. [subverti, French; subverti, Latin.]
 1. To overthrow; to overturn; to destroy; to turn upside down.

God, by things deem'd weak,
Subverts the worldly throng and worldly wife. Milton.
 No proposition can be received for divine revelation, if contradictory to our clear intuitive knowledge; because this would subvert the principles of all knowledge. Locke.

Trees are subverted or broken by high winds. Mortimer.
 2. To corrupt; to confound.
 Strive not about words to no purpose, but to the subverting of the hearers. 2 Tim. ii. 14.

SUBVERTER. n. f. [from subvert.] Overthrower; destroyer.
 O traitor! worse than Simon was to Troy;
 O vile subverter of the Gallick reign.
 More false than Gano was to Charlemagne. Dryden.

SUBURB. n. f. [suburbium, Latin.]
 1. Building without the walls of a city.
 There's a trim rabble let in: are all these your faithful friends o' th' suburbs? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

What can be more to the divagation of the power of the Spaniard, than to have marched seven days in the heart of his countries, and lodged three nights in the suburb of his principal city? Bacon's War with Spain.

2. The confines; the outpart.
 The suburbs of my jacket are so gone,
 I have not left one skirt to sit upon. Cleveland.

They on the smothered plank,
 The suburb of their strawbuilt citadel, Expatriate. Milton.

When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged, if they always stood in the suburb and expectation of sorrows. Taylor.

SUBURBAN. adj. [suburbanus, Latin; from suburb.] Inhabiting the suburb.
 Poor clinches the suburban muse affords,
 And Pantom waging harmless war with words. Dryden.

SUBWORKER. n. f. [sub and worker.] Underworker; subordinate helper.
 He that governs well leads the blind; but he that teaches gives him eyes: and it is glorious to be a subworker to grace, in freeing it from some of the inconveniences of original sin. South.

SUCCEDEANEOUS. adj. [succedaneus, Lat.] Supplying the place of something else.
 Nor is Ætius strictly to be believed when he prescribeth the stone of the otter as a succedaneous unto castoreum.
 I have not discovered the menstruum: I will present a succedaneous experiment made with a common liquor. Boyle.

SUCCEDEANUM. n. f. [Latin.] That which is put to serve for something else.
TO SUCCEED. v. n. [succedere, French; succedo, Latin.]

1. To follow in order.
 If I were now to die,
 'T were to be most happy; for I fear,
 My soul hath her consent to absolute,
 That not another comfort like to this Succeed in unknown fate. Shakespeare's Othello.

Those of all ages to succeed will curse my head. Milton.
 2. To come into the place of one who has quitted.
 Workmen let it cool by degrees in such relencings of nealing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air in the room of the fire. Digby on Bodies.

Enjoy 'till I return
 Short pleasures; for long woes are to succeed. Milton.
 If the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded to him in copartnership, without prelation or preference of the eldest to a double portion. Hale.

Revenge succeeds to love, and rage to grief. Dryden.
 While these limbs the vital spirit feeds,
 While day to night, and night to day succeeds,
 Burn-off rings morn and evening shall be thine,
 And fires eternal in thy temples shine. Dryden.

These dull harmless makers of lampoons are yet of dangerous example to the publick: some witty men may succeed to their designs, and, mixing sense with malice, blast the reputation of the most innocent. Dryden.

The pretensions of Saul's family, who received his crown from the immediate appointment of God, ended with his reign; and David, by the same title, succeeded in his throne, to the exclusion of Jonathan. Locke.

3. To obtain one's wish; to terminate an undertaking in the desired effect.
 'Tis almost impossible for poets to succeed without ambition: imagination must be raised by a desire of fame to a desire of pleasing. Dryden.

SUC

This address I have long thought owing; and if I had never attempted, I might have been vain enough to think I might have succeeded. Dryden.

A knave's a knave to me in ev'ry state;
 Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail:
 Sporus at court, or Japhet in a jail. Pope.
 4. To terminate according to wish.
 If thou deal truly, thy doings shall prosperously succeed to thee. Tob. iv. 6.

This was impossible for Virgil to imitate, because of the severity of the Roman language: Spencer endeavoured it in Shepherd's Calendar; but neither will it succeed in English. Dryden.

5. To go under cover.
 Please that filvan scene to take,
 Where whistling winds uncertain shadows make;
 Or will you to the cooler cave succeed,
 Whole mouth the curling vines have overspread. Dryden.

TO SUCCEED. v. a.
 1. To follow; to be subsequent or consequent to.
 In that place no creature was hurtful unto man, and those destructive effects they now discover succeeded the curie, and came in with thorns and briars. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. To prosper; to make successful.
 Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
 And high-raised Jove from his dark prison freed,
 Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
 Will gloriously the new laid works succeed. Dryden.

Succeed my wish, and second my design,
 The fairest Deiopia shall be thine,
 And make thee father of a happy line. Dryden's Æn.

SUCCEEDER. n. f. [from succeed.] One who follows; one who comes into the place of another.
 Why should calamity be full of words?
 — Windy attorneys to their client woes,
 Airy succeeders of intestine joys,
 Poor breathing orators of miseries! Shakespeare's R. III.

Now this great succeeder all repairs,
 He builds up strength and greatness for his heirs,
 Out of the virtues that adorn'd his blood. Daniel.
 Nature has so far imprinted it in us, that should the envy of predecessors deny the secret to succeeders, they yet would find it out. Locke.

They make one man's particular fancies, perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them to their succeeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness as presumption. Boyle.

SUCCESS. n. f. [succes, French; succes, Latin.]
 1. The termination of any affair happy or unhappy. Succes without any epithet is commonly taken for good success.
 For good succes of his hands, he asketh ability to do of him that is most unable. Wisd. xiii. 19.

Perplex'd and troubled at his bad succes Milton.
 The temper food.
 Not Lemuel's mother with more care
 Did counsel or instruct her heir;
 Or teach, with more succes, her son
 The vices of the time to shun. Waller.

3. To be injured.
Publick business suffers by private infirmities, and kingdoms fall into weaknes by the diseases or decays of those that manage them. Temple.
SUFFERABLE. adj. [from suffer.] Tolerable; such as may be endured.

SUF

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own writing, but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office. Wotton.

SUFFERABLY. adv. [from sufferable.] Tolerably; so as to be endured.

An infant Titan held she in her arms;
Yet sufferably bright, the eye might bear
The ungracious glories of his beamy hair. Addison.

SUFFERANCE. n. f. [from suffer, suffrance, French.]

1. Pain; inconvenience; misery.
He must not only die,
But thy unkindness shall the death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
How much education may reconcile young people to pain and sufferance, the examples of Sparta flew. Locke on Education.

2. Patience; moderation.
He thought 't have slain her in his fierce despatch,
But hasty heat tempering with sufferance wise,
He staid his hand. Fairy Queen.
He hath given excellent sufferance and vigorousness to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage. Taylor.
And should I touch it nearly, bear it
With all the sufferance of a tender friend. Orway's Orphan.

3. Toleration; permission; not hindrance.
In process of time, some whiles by sufferance, and somewhiles by special leave and favour, they erected to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner. Hooker.
Most wretched man
That to afflictions does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end. Fairy Queen.
Some villains of my court
Are in content and sufferance in this. Shakespeare.
Both gloried to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood,
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength;
Not by the sufferance of supernal pow'r. Austen's Par. Lost.

SUFFERER. n. f. [from suffer.]

1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience.
This evil on the Philistines is fall'n,
The sufferers then will scarce molest us here,
From other hands we need not much to fear.
And when his love was bounded in a few,
That were unhappy that they might be true,
Made you the fav'rite of his last sad times,
That is, a sufferer in his subjects crime. Dryden.
She returns to me with joy in her face, not from the sight of her husband, but from the good luck she has had at cards; and if she has been a loser, I am doubly a sufferer by it: the comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away my estate. Addison's Spectator.
The history of civil wars and rebellions does not make such deep and lasting impressions, as events of the same nature in which we or our friends have been sufferers. Addison.

2. One who allows; one who permits.
SUFFERING. n. f. [from suffer.] Pain suffered.
Rejoice in my sufferings for you. Col. i. 24.
With what strength, what steadiness of mind,
He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings? Addison.
We may hope the sufferings of innocent people, who have lived in that place which was the scene of rebellion, will secure from the like attempts. Addison.
It increased the smart of his present sufferings to compare them with his former happiness. Atterbury.

SUFFICE. v. a. [from suffice, French; sufficio, Latin.] To be enough; to be sufficient; to be equal to the end or purpose.
If thou ask me why, suffice my reasons are good. Shakespeare.
A strong and succulent moisture is able, without drawing help from the earth, to suffice the sprouting of the plant. Bacon.
To recount almighty works
What words or tongue of seraph can suffice,
Or heart of man suffice to comprehend. Milton's Par. Lost.
The indolence we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change: being content; and that is enough. Locke.
He lived in such temperance, as was enough to make the longest life agreeable; and in such a course of piety, as sufficed to make the most sudden death so also. Pope.

SUFFICIENT. adj. [from suffice, French; sufficiens, Latin.]

the way, I shall have given occasion to others to call about for new discoveries. Locke.
She would ruin me in filks, were not the quantity that goes to a large pin-cushion sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. Addison.
Sufficient beneficence is what is competent to maintain a man and his family, and maintain hospitality; and likewise to pay and satisfy such dues belonging to the bishop. Aylmer's Paragon.
Seven months are a sufficient time to correct vice in a Yahoo. Swift.

2. Qualified for any thing by fortune or otherwise.
In saying he is a good man, understand me, that he is sufficient. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
SUFFICIENTLY. adv. [from sufficient.] To a sufficient degree;
enough.
If religion did possess sincerely and sufficiently the hearts of all men, there would need be no other restraint from evil. Hosier.
Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd
Of happiness? Milton.
All to whom they are proposed, are by his grace sufficiently moved to attend and assent to them; sufficiently, but not irresistibly; for if all were irresistibly moved, all would embrace them, and if none were sufficiently moved, none would embrace them. Rogers's Sermons.

SUFFISANCE [French.] Excess; plenty; Obsolete.
There him rests in riotous suffisance. Spenser.
Of all his gladfulness and kingly joyance.
SUFFOCATE. v. a. [from suffocare, French; suffoco, Latin.] To choke by exclusion or interception of air.
Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shakespeare.
This chaos, when degree is suffocate, Follows the choking. Shakespeare's Truill and Cressida.
Air but momentarily remains in our bodies, only to refrigerate the heart, which being once performed, left being self-heated again, it should suffocate that part, it hatches back the same way it passed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
A swelling discontent is apt to suffocate and strangle without passage. Collier of Friendship.
All involv'd in smoke, the latent foe
From every cranny suffocated falls. Thomson.

SUFFOCATION. n. f. [from suffocate.] The act of choking; the state of being choked.

Short thick fobs

SUIT, n. f. [suite, French.]
 1. A set; a number of things correspondent one to the other.
 We, ere the day, two suits of armour fought,
 Which borne before him, on his steed he brought. Dryd.
 2. Cloaths made one part to answer another.
 What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits is wonderful. Shakespeare's Henry V.
 Him all repute
 For his device in handfoming a suit;
 To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, cut and plait,
 Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.
 His majesty was supplied with three thousand suits of cloaths, with good proportions of shoes and stockings. Clarendon.
 3. Consecration; series; regular order.
 Every five and thirty years the same kind and suite of weathers comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat; and they call it the prime.
 4. Out of Suits. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.
 Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune,
 That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shak.
 5. [Suite, French.] Retinue; company. Obsolete.
 Plexirtus's ill-led life, and worse gotten honour, should have tumbled together to destruction, had there not come in Ty-deus and Telenor, with fifty in their suite to his defence. Sidney.
 6. [From To Sue.] A petition; an address of entreaty.
 Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Shakespeare.
 She gallops o'er a courtier's nose;
 And then dreams be of smelling out a suit. Shakespeare.
 Had I a suit to Mr. Shallow, I would honour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.
 Many shall make suit unto thee. Job xi. 19.
 My mind, neither with pride's itch, nor yet hath been Poison'd with love to see or to be seen;
 I had no suit there, nor new suit to shew;
 Yet went to court. Donne.
 7. Courtship.
 He that hath the steerage of my course,
 Direct my suit. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
 Their determinations are to return to their home and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other fort than your father's imposition. Shakespeare.
 8. In Spenser it seems to signify pursuit; prosecution.
 High amongst all knights haft hung thy shield,
 Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest thooeest.
 And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field. Spenser.
 9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause;
 and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgment. Ayliffe.
 All that had any suits in law came unto them. Sylva.
 Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause.
Bacon's War with Spain.
 Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great perfonages. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
 To Alibech alone refer your suit,
 And let his sentence finish your dispute. Dryden.
 John Bull was flattered by the lawyers that his suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbutnot.
TO SUIT, v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To fit; to adapt to something else.
Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 The matter and manner of their tales, and of their telling, are so *suit*ed to their different educations and humours, that each would be improper in any other. Dryden.
 2. To be fitted to; to become.
 Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
 Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.
 Her purple habit fits with such a grace
 On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden.
 If different sects should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would set down only such as *suit*ed their distinct hypotheses.
 Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
 Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.
 3. To dress; to clothe.
 Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
 As went he *suit*ed to his watry tomb. Shakespeare.
 If spirits can assume both form and suit,
 You come to fright us. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
 Be better *suit*ed;
 These weeds are memories of those misfortunes;
 I prythee put them off to worser hours. Shakespeare.
 I'll disrobe me
 Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
 As do's a Briton peasant. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO SUIT, v. n. To agree; to accord.
 The one intense, the other still remits;
 Cannot well suit with either; but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.
 The place itself was *suit*ing to his care;
 Uncouth and savage as the cruel fair. Dryden.
 Pity does with a noble nature suit. Dryden.
 Constraint does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.
 This he says, because it suits with his hypothesis, but proves it not.
 Give me not an office
 That suits with me so ill; thou know'st my temper. Shak.
SUITABLE, adj. [from suit.] Fitting; according with; agreeable to.
 Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that affliction. Sidney.
 What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.
 To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a stain? Hook.
 It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman Church; for why should not their science as well as service be in an unknown tongue?
 As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity.
 Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
 A vile conceit in pompous words express'd,
 Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.
SUITABLENESS, n. f. [from suitable.] Fitness; agreeableness.
 In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glanville.
 With ordinary minds, it is the suitableness, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to; and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first. South's Sermons.
 He creates those sympathies and suitableness of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons so affected together. South's Sermons.
 Consider the laws themselves, and their suitableness, or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tilleyson.
SUITABLY, adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; according to.
 Whoever speaks upon a certain occasion may take any text suitably thereto; and ought to speak suitably to that text.
South's Sermons.
 Some rank deity, whose filthy face
 We suitably o'er thinking stables place. Dryden.

 court of their lord. Bailey.
SUITER, n. f. [from suit.]
SUITOR, n. f. [from suit.]
 1. One that sues; a petitioner; a supplicant.
 As humility is in suiters a decent virtue, so the testification thereof, by such effectual acknowledgments, not only argueth a found apprehension of his supereminent glory and majesty before whom we stand, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hook.
 She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
 Cut off by course of justice. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
 My piteous soul began the wretchedness
 Of suitors at court to mourn, Donne.
 Not only bind thine own hands, but bind the hand of suit- ors also from offering. Bacon.
 Yet their port
 Not of mean suitors; nor important less Seem'd their petition, than when the ancient pair Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha, to restore
 The race of mankind drown'd, before the shrine
 Of Themis stood devout. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 I challenge nothing;
 But I'm an humble suitor for these prisoners. Denham.
 My lord, I come an humble suitor to you. Raue.
 2. A wooer; one who courts a mistress.
 I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart;
 for truly I love none.
 A dear happiness to women! they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor.
 He pass'd a year at Goodby under the counsels of his mother, and then became a suitor at London to Sir Roger Ashton's daughter. Watson's Life of the Duke of Buckingham.
 By many suitors fought, the mocks their pains,
 And still her vow'd virginity maintains. Dryden.
 He drew his seat, familiar, to her side,
 Far from the suitor train, a brutal crowd. Pope's Oblivion.
SUITRESS, n. f. [from suiter.] A female supplicant.
 'Twere pity

 They threaten every fortune mixt with mine. Dryden.
 The sullen fiend her frowning wings display'd,
 Unwilling left the night, and fought the nether shade. Dryd.
 3. Intractable; obstinate.
 Things are as sullen as we are, and will be what they are,
 whatever we think of them. Tilleyson's Sermons.
 4. Gloomy; dark; cloudy; dismal.
 Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
 Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight? Shak. H. VI.
 Night with her sullen wings to double shade,
 The desert fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
 And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam. Miln.
 A glimpse of moon-shine, streak'd with red;
 A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light,
 That dances through the clouds, and flits again. Dryden.
 No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows;
 The dreared East is all the wind that blows. Pope.
 5. Heavy; dull; sorrowful.
 Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
 And sullen preface of your own decay. Shak. K. John.
SULLENLY, adv. [from sullen.] Gloomily; malignantly; in-tractably.
 To say they are framed without the assistance of some principle that has wisdom in it, and that they come to pass from chance, is sullenly to assert a thing because we will assert it.
More's Antidote against Atheism.
 He in chains demanded more Than he impos'd in victory before:
 He sullenly reply'd, he could not make Hele offers now. Dryden's Indian Emperor.
 The gen'ral mends his weary pace,
 And sullenly to his revenge he fails;
 So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
 And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.
SULLENNESS, n. f. [from sullen.] Gloominess; moroseness;
 sullenly anger; malignity; intractability.
 Speech being as rare as precious, her silence without sullen- ness, her modesty without affectation, and her shamefastness without ignorance. Sidney.
 To fit my sullenness,
 He to another key his file doth dress. Donne.
 In those vernal seasons, when the air is calm and pleasant, it were an injury and sullenness against nature not to go out, and see her riches. Milton.
 Quit not the world out of any hypocrisy, sullenness, or superstition, but out of a sincere love of true knowledge and virtue. More.
 With these comforts about me, and sullenness enough to use no remedy, monieur Zulichem came to see me. Temple.

SUPERFETATION. n. f. [from superfetatio, French; from superfe- tare.] One conception following another, so that both are in the womb together, but come not to their full time for delivery together.
Superfetation must be by abundance of sap in the bough that putteth it forth.
If the superfetation be made with considerable intermission, the latter most commonly becomes abortive; for the first being confirmed, engrosseth the aliment from the other.
SUPERFICIE. n. f. [from superficies, Fr. superficie, Latin.] Outside; surface.
Then if it rise not to the former height
Of superficie, conclude that soil is light.
SUPERFICIAL. adj. [from superficialis, Fr. from superficies, Latin.]
1. Lying on the surface; not reaching below the surface.
That, upon the superficial ground, heat and moisture cause putrefaction, in England is found not true.
From these phenomena several have concluded some general rupture in the superficial parts of the earth.
There is not one infidel living so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of light, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies.
2. Shallow; contrived to cover something.
This superficial tale
Is but a preface to her worthy praise.
3. Shallow; not profound; smattering; not learned.
That knowledge is so very superficial, and so ill-grounded, that it is impossible for them to describe in what consists the beauty of those works.
SUPERFICIALITY. n. f. [from superficialis.] The quality of being superficial.
By these faults the colours of bodies receive degrees of lustre or obscurity, superficiality or profundity.
SUPERFICIALLY. adv. [from superficialis.]
1. On the surface; not below the surface.
2. Without penetration; without close heed.

prim of a whale.
SUPERFLUANT. adj. [from superfluitans, Lat.] Floating above.
A chalky earth, beaten and steeped in water, affordeth a cream or fatness on the top, and a gross subfidence at the bottom: out of the cream, or superfluance, the finest dishes are made; out of the residue, the coarser.
SUPERFLUITY.

At the kindling of the fire, and lighting of candles, they say certain prayers, and use some other superstitious rites, which shew that they honour the fire and the light. Spenser.

Have I
Been out of fondness superstitious to him?
And am I thus rewarded? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Nature's own work it seem'd, nature taught art,
And to a superstitious eye the haunt
Of wood-gods and wood-nymphs. Milton.

A venerable wood,
Where rites divine were paid, whose holy hair
Was kept and cut with superstitious care. Dryden.

2. Over accurate; scrupulous beyond need.

SUPERSTITIOUSLY. adv. [from superstitious.] In a superstitious manner.

There reigned in this island a king, whose memory of all others we most adore; not superstitiously, but as a divine instrument. Bacon.

Neither of these methods should be too scrupulously, and superstitiously pursued. Watts's Logic.

To SUPERSTRAIN. v. a. [from super and strain.] To strain beyond the just stretch.

In the framing of a string, the further it is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note. Bacon.

To SUPERSTRUCT. v. a. [from super and structus, Latin.] To build upon any thing.

Two notions of fundamentals may be conceived, one signifying that whereon our eternal bliss is immediately superstructed, the other whereon our obedience to the faith of Christ is founded. Hammond.

If his habit of sin have not corrupted his principles, the virtuous Christian may think it reasonable to reform, and the preacher may hope to superstruct good life upon such a foundation. Hammond's Fundamentals.

This is the only proper basis on which to superstruct first innocence and then virtue. Deacy of piety.

SUPERSTRUCTURE. n. f. [from superstruct.] An edifice raised on any thing.

I want not to improve the honour of the living by impairing that of the dead; and my own profession hath taught me not to erect new superstructures upon an old ruin. Denham.

SUPERSTRUCTIVE. adj. [from superstruct.] Built upon something else.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, must necessarily resolve, that what were drunkenness in another, is not so in him, and nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructive, be it never so gross. Hammond.

SUPERSTRUCTURE. n. f. [from super and structure.] That which is raised or built upon something else.

He who builds upon the present, builds upon the narrow compass of a point; and where the foundation is so narrow, the superstructure cannot be high and strong too. Saunders's Sermons.

Purgatory was not known in the primitive church, and is a superstructure upon the Christian religion. Tillotson.

You have added to your natural endowments the superstructures of study. Dryden.

- Art from that fund each just supply provides,
Works without flow, and without pomp presides. Pope.
- To SUPPORT. v. a. [supporter, French; supportare, Ital.]
1. To sustain; to prop; to bear up.
Stooping to support each flow'r of tender stalk. Milton.
The palace built by Picus, vast and proud,
Supported by a hundred pillars stood. Dryden.
The original community of all things appearing from this donation of God, the sovereignty of Adam, built upon his private dominion, must fall, not having any foundation to support it. Locke.
 2. To endure any thing painful without being overcome.
Strongly to suffer and support our pains. Milton.
Couldst thou support that burden? Milton.
This fierce demeanour, and his insolence,
The patience of a god could not support. Dryden.
 3. To endure.
She scarce awake her eyes could keep,
Unable to support the fumes of sleep. Dryden.
None can support a diet of flesh and water without acids, as salt, vinegar, and bread, without falling into a putrid fever.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
 4. To sustain; to keep from fainting.
With inward consolations recompens'd,
And oft supported. Milton.
- SUPPORT. n. f. [support, French; from the verb.]
1. Act or power of sustaining.
Though the idea we have of a horse or stone be but the collection of those several sensible qualities which we find united in them, yet, because we cannot conceive how they should subsist alone, we suppose them existing in and supported by some common subject, which support we denote by the name substance, though it be certain we have no clear idea of that support. Locke.
 2. Prop; sustaining power.
 3. Necessaries of life.
 4. Maintenance; supply.
- SUPPORTABLE. adj. [supportable, French; from support.]
- Tolerable; to be endured. It may be observed that Shake- speare accents the first syllable.
- As great to me, as late; and, supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker Than you may call to comfort you. Shak. Tempest.
Alterations in the project of uniting Christians might be very supportable, as things in their own nature indifferent. See.
I wish that whatever part of misfortunes they must bear, may be rendered supportable to them. Pope.
- SUPPORTABLENESS. n. f. [from supportable.] The state of being tolerable.
- SUPPORTANCE. n. f. [from support.] Maintenance; support. Both these words are obsolete.
- SUPPORTATION. s. port. Both these words are obsolete.

His quarrel he finds scarce worth talking of, therefore draw for the supportance of his vow. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
The benefited subject should render some small portion of his gain, for the supportation of the king's expence. Bacon.
- SUPPORTER. n. f. [from support.]
1. One that supports.
You must walk by us upon either hand,
And good supporters are you. Shaksp. Meas. for Measure.
Because a relation cannot be founded in nothing, and the thing here related as a supporter, or a support, is not represented to the mind by any distinct idea. Locke.
 2. Prop; that by which any thing is borne up from falling.
More might be added of helms, crests, mantles, and supporters. Camden.
The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured. Bacon.
We shall be discharged of our load; but you, that are designed for beams and supporters, shall bear. L'Estrange.
There is no loss of room at the bottom, as there is in a building set upon supporters. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 3. Sustain; comforter.
The faints have a companion and supporter in all their miseries. South's Sermons.
 4. Maintainer; defender.
The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute in great part to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Watson.
All examples represent ingratitude as sitting in its throne, with pride at its right hand, and cruelty at its left; worthy supporters of such a reigning impiety. South.
Love was no more, when loyalty was gone,
The great supporter of his awful throne. Dryden.
- SUPPORTABLE. adj. [from support.] That may be supposed.
- Invincible ignorance is, in the far greatest number of men, ready to be confronted against the necessity of their believing all the severals of any supportable catalogue. Hammond.
- SUPPORTAL. n. f. [from support.] Position without proof; imagination; belief.
Young Fortinbras,
Holding a weak support of our worth,
Thinks our state to be out of frame. Shakespeare.

- Little can be looked for towards the advancement of natural theory, but from those that are likely to mend our prospect;
the defect of events, and sensible appearances, suffer us to proceed no further towards science, than to imperfect guesses and timorous suppositions. Glauv. Seep. Preface.
- Interest, with a Jew, never proceeds but upon supposal at least of a firm and sufficient bottom. South.
- Artful men endeavour to entangle thoughtless women by hold supposals and offers. Clarissa.
- To SUPPOSE. v. a. [supposer, French; suppono, Latin.]
1. To lay down without proof; to advance by way of argument or illustration without maintaining the truth of the position.
Suppose some to neglect that they will not be brought to learn by gentle ways, yet it does not thence follow that the rough discipline of the cudgel is to be used to all. Locke.
 2. To admit without proof.
This is to be entertained as a firm principle, that when we have as great assurance that a thing is, as we could possibly supposing it were, we ought not to make any doubt of its existence. Tillotson.
 3. To imagine; to believe without examination.
Tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over markers. Shaksp.
Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the king's sons; for Ammon only is slain. 2 Sa. xiii. 32.
I suppose we should compel them to a quick result. Milton.
 4. To require as previous to itself.
This supposeth something, without evident ground. Hale.
One falsehood always supposes another, and renders all you can say suspected. Female Quixote.
- SUPPOSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Supposition; position without proof; unevincenced conceit.
That we come short of our supposes so far,
That after seven years siege, yet Troy-walls stand? Shaksp.
Is Egypt's safety, and the king's, and your's,
Fit to be trusted on a bare supposé?
I hat he is honest? Dryden's Cleomenes.

SUPPOSER. n. f. [from suppose.] One that supposes.
Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposers bleed thine eye. Shakespeare.

SUPPOSITION. n. f. [supposition, French; from suppose.] Position laid down; hypothesis; imagination yet unproved.
In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. Shakespeare.

Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye;
And in that glorious supposition think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die. Shaksp.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

Such an original irresistible notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a Deity, nor is pretended to by religion. Bentley.

SUPPOSITIOUS. adj. [from suppositus, suppositivus, Lat.] Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another.
The destruction of Mufstapha was so fatal to Solymán's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solymán is suspected to be of strange blood; for that Selymus II. was thought to be sup- positivus.

It is their opinion that no man ever killed his father; but that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, suppositivus, or begotten in adultery. Addison.

Some alterations in the globe tend rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these suppositivus ones manifestly would do. Woodward.

SUPPOSITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from suppositivus.] State of being counterfeit.

SUPPOSITIVELY. adv. [from suppositivus.] Upon supposition.
The unreformed finner may have some hope suppositively, if he do change and repent: the honest penitent may hope positively. Hammond.

SUPPOSITORY. n. f. [suppositoire, Fr. suppositorium, Latin.]
A kind of solid clyster.
Nothing relieves the head more than the piles, therefore sup- positories of honey, aloes, and rock-salt ought to be tried. Arb.

To SUPPRESS. v. a. [supprime, suppressus, Lat. supprimer, Fr.]

 1. To crush; to overpower; to overwhelm; to subdue; to reduce from any state of activity or commotion.
Gloster would have armour out of the Tower,
To crown himself king and suppress the prince. Shak. H.V.
Every rebellion, when it is suppressed, doth make the subject weaker, and the prince stronger. Davies on Ireland.
Sir William Herbert, with a well armed and ordered company, set sharply upon them; and oppressing some of the for-wardest of them by death, suppressed the residue by fear. Hayward.
 2. To conceal; not to tell; not to reveal.
Things not reveal'd, which th' invisible King,
Only omniscient, hath suppress'd in night. Milton.
Still he suppresses the name, and this keeps him in a pleasing suspense; and, in the very close of her speech, she indirectly mentions it. Broom's N. Net on the Odyssey.

crushes, or conceals.
- To SUPPURATE. v. a. [from pus puris, Lat. suppurare, Fr.]
To generate pus or matter.
This disease is generally fatal: if it suppurates the pus, it is evacuated into the lower belly, where it produceth putrefac-tion. Arbutnot on Diet.
- To SUPPURATE. v. n. To grow to pus.
- SUPPURATION. n. f. [suppuration, French; from suppurate.]
1. The ripening or change of the matter of a tumour into pus.
If the inflammation be gone too far towards a suppuration, then it must be promoted with suppuratives, and opened by incision. Wigman.
This great attrition must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids, and consequently to suppurations. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. The matter suppurated.
The great physician of souls sometimes cannot cure without cutting us: sin has fettered inwardly, and he must lance the imposthume, to let out death with the suppuration. South.
- SUPPURATIVE. adj. [suppuratif, French; from suppurate.]
Digestive; generating matter.
- SUPPUTATION. n. f. [supputation, French; supputo, Latin.]
Reckoning; account; calculation; computation.
From these differing properties of day and year arise difficulties in carrying on and reconciling the supputation of time in long measures. Holder on Time.
- The Jews saw every day their Messiah still farther removed from them; that the promises of their doctors, about his speedy manifestations, were false; that the predictions of the prophets, whom they could now no longer understand, were covered with obscurity; that all the supputations of time either terminated in Jesus Christ, or were without a period. West.
- To SUPPUTE. v. a. [from supputo, Latin.] To reckon; to calculate.
- SUPRA, [Latin] in composition, signifies above, or before.
- SUPRALAPRARY. adj. [supra and lapary, Latin.] Antecedent to the fall of man.
- SUPRAVULGAR. adj. [supra and vulgar.] Above the vulgar.
None of these motives can prevail with a man to furnish himself with supravulgar and noble qualities. Callier.
- SUPREMACY. n. f. [from supremus.] Highest place; highest authority; state of being supreme.
No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, in as much as the order of your discipline admitteth no standing inequality of courts, no spiritual judge to have any ordinary superior on earth, but as many supremacies as there are parishes and several congregations. Hooker.
- As we under heav'n are supreme head,
So, under him, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold. Shaksp. K. John.
I am assur'd that women
Seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shaksp.
- Put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate. Milton.
Henry VIII. had no intention to change religion: he continued to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy. Swift.
You're formed by nature for this supremacy, which is already granted from the distinguishing character of your writing. Dryden to Dorset.
- To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another. Rogers.
From some wild curs that from their masters ran,
Abhorring the supremacy of man,
In woods and caves the rebel race began. Dryden.
- SUPREME. adj. [supremus, Latin.]
1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that supremus is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political.
As no man serveth God, and loveth him not; so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whole divine authority and power it investeth others. Hooker.
- The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
This strength, the seat of Deity supreme. Milton.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by flow degrees;

SUR

- Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.
2. Highest; most excellent.
My foul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
No single virtue we could most commend,
Whether the wife, the mother, or the friend;
For he was all in that supreme degree,
That as no one prevail'd, so all was she. Dryden.
To him both heav'n
The right had giv'n,
And his own love bequeath'd supreme command. Dryden.
- SUPREMACY. adv. [from the adjective.] In the highest degree.
- The starving chemist in his golden views Supremely blest, the poet in his muse. Pope.
- SUR. [sur, French.] In composition, means upon or over and above.

So gain'd the suraddition, Leonatus. Shak. Cymbeline.
- SURAL. adj. [from sura, Latin.] Being in the calf of the leg.
He was wounded in the inside of the calf of his leg, into the sural artery. Wigman's Surgery.
- SURANCE. n. f. [from sure.] Warrant; security; affluence.
- Give some surance that thou art revenge;
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot-wheels. Shaksp.
- To SURBATE. v. a. [salvatur, French.] To bruise and batter the feet with travel; to harass; to fatigue.
Their march they continued all that night, the horsemen often alighting, that the foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them; however they could not but be extremely weary and surbated. Clarendon.
- Chalky land surbates and spoils oxens feet. Mortimer.
- SURBEAT. The participle passive of surbate.
- A bear and tyger being met
In cruel fight on Lybick ocean wide,
Espy a traveller with feet surbet,
Whom they in equal prey hope to divide. Fairy Queen.
- To SURCEASE. v. n. [sur and cessare, French; cesso, Latin.]
1. To be at an end; to stop; to cease; to be no longer in use or being.
Small favours will my prayers increase:
Granting my suit, you give me all;
And then my prayers must needs surcease;
For I have made your godhead fall. Donne.
 2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.
To fly altogether from God, to despair, that creatures unworthy shall be able to obtain any thing at his hands, and under that pretence to surcease from prayers, as bootless or fruitless offices, were to him no less injurious than pernicious to our own souls. Hooker.
- Nor did the British squadrons now surcease
To gall their foes o'erwhelm'd. Philips.
- To SURCEASE. v. a. To stop; to put to an end. Obsolete.
- All pain hath end, and every war hath peace;
But mine no price, nor prayer, may surcease. Spenser.
- SURCEASE. n. f. Cessation; stop.
- It might very well agree with your principles, if your dicipline were fully planted, even to fend out your writs of sur- cease unto all courts of England for the most things handled in them. Hooker.
- SURCHARGE. n. f. [surcharge, French; from the verb.] Over-burthen; more than can be well born.
- The air, after receiving a charge, doth not receive a sur- charge, or greater charge, with like appetite as it doth the first. Bacon's Natural History.
An object of surcharge or excess destroyeth the sense; as the light of the sun, the eye; a violent sound near the ear, the hearing. Bacon's Natural History.
- The moralists make this raging of a lion to be a surcharge of one madness upon another. L'Estrange.
- To SURCHARGE. v. a. [surcharge, French.] To overload; to overburthen.
- They put upon every portion of land a reasonable rent, which they called Romefcot, the which might not surcharge
the tenant or freeholder. Spenser on Ireland.
- Tamas was returned to Tauris, in hope to have suddenly surprised his enemy, surcharged with the pleasures of so rich a city. Kneller's History of the Turks.
- More remov'd,
Lest heav'n surcharg'd with potent multitude,
Might hap to move new broils. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He ceas'd, discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears Without the vent of words. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SUR

When graceful sorrow in her pomp appears,
Sure she is dress'd in Meleinda's tears:
Your head inclin'd, as hiding grief from view,
Droops like a rose surcharg'd with morning dew. Dryden.
SURCHARGER. n. f. [from surcharge.] One that overburthens.
SURCINGLE. n. f. [from sur and cingulum, Latin.]
1. A girth with which the burthen is bound upon a horse.
2. The girdle of a cassock.

That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
Their swords, their shields, their surcoats were the same. Dry.

SURD. adj. [from surdus, Latin.]
1. Deaf; wanting the sense of hearing.
2. Unheard; not perceived by the ear.

3. Not expressed by any term.
SURE. adj. [from seure, French.]
1. Certain; unfeigned; infallible.

The testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple. Psal. xix. 7.

Who knows,
Let this be good, whether our angry foe
Can give us, or will ever? How he can,
Is doubtful; that he never will, is sure. Milt. Parad. Lost.

2. Certainly doomed.
Our coin beyond sea is valued according to the silver in it:
fending it in bullion is the safest way, and the weightiest is sure to go. Locke.

3. Confident; undoubting; certainly knowing.
Friar Laurence met them both;
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it. Shakespeare.

Let no man seek what may befall;
Evil he may be sure. Milton.

The youngest in the morning are not sure
That 'till the night their life they can secure. Denham.

While fore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why would we tempt the doubtful dye agent?
In wars renew'd, uncertain of success,
Sure of a share, as umpires of the peace. Dryden.

If you find nothing new in the matter, I am sure much less will you in the file. Wake.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

4. Safe; firm; certain; past doubt or danger.

tempering their passions, and reducing their appetites. Temple.

A peace cannot fail us, provided we make sure of Spain.
Temple.

Revenge is now my joy; he's not for me,
And I'll make sure he ne'er shall be for thee. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
All to make sure the vengeance of this day,
Which even this day has ruin'd. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

Make Cato sure, and give up Utica,
Cesar will ne'er refuse thee such a trifle. Addison's Cato.

They have reason to make all actions worthy of observation, which are sure to be observed. Atterbury.

5. Firm; stable; not liable to failure.
Thou the garland wear'st successfully;
Yet though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

I with your horses swift and sure of foot,
And so I do commend you to their backs. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Virtue, dear friend, needs no defence;
The surest guard is innocence. Roscommon.

Partition firm and sure the waters to divide.
Doubting thus of innate principles, men will call pulling up the old foundations of knowledge and certainty: I persuade myself that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations surer. Locke.

To prove a genuine birth;
On female truth affecting faith relies;
Thus manifest of right, I build my claim,
Sure founded on a fair maternal fame. Pope's Odyssey.

6. To be SURE. Certainly. This is a vitious expression: more properly be sure.
Objects of sense would then determine the views of all such,
to be sure, who converted perpetually with them. Atterbury.

Though the chymist could not calcine the caput mortuum, to obtain its fixed salt, to be sure it must have some. Atterbury.

SURE. adv. [from seurement, French.] Certainly; without doubt;
doubtless. It is generally without emphasis; and, notwithstanding its original meaning, expresses rather doubt than assertion.

Something, sure, of state
Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakespeare.
Her looks were flush'd, and fullen was her mien,
That sure the virgin goddess, had she been,
Aught but a virgin, must the guilt have seen. Addison.

SURE. n. f. [from seurement, French.] A surety; a pledge.
She loaths, detests him, flies his hated presence.
Sure, upon the whole, a bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic. Pope.

There remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more, in surety of the which One part of Acquitain is bound to us. Shakespeare.

5. Hostage; bondsmen; one that gives security for another;
one that is bound for another.
That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,
One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.

I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him.
Gen. xliii. 9.

Yet be not surety, if thou be a father;
Love is a personal debt: I cannot give My children's right, nor ought he take it. Herbert.

All, in infancy, are by others presented with the desires of the parents, and intercession of sureties, that they may be early admitted by baptism into the school of Christ. Flammond.

SURFACE. n. f. [from sur and face, French.] Superficies; outside;
superfice. It is accented by Milton on the last syllable.
Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereal mold, whereon we stand,
All their surfaces shall be truly plain, or truly spherical, and look all the same way, so as together to compose one even surface. Newton's Opt.

Errors like straws upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below. Dryden.

TO SURFEIT. v. n. To be fed to satiety and sickness.
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;
Their over-greedy love hath *surfeit*ed. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
They are as sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
Take heed lest your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness. Luke xxi. 34.

Though some had so *surfeit*ed in the vineyards, and with the wines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home. Clarendon.

They must be let loose to the childish play they fancy, which they should be weaned from, by being made to surfeit of
it. Locke.

SURFEIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Sickness or satiety caused by overfulness.
When we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the fun, the moon and stars. Shakespeare. King Lear.

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So *surfeit*ed I've been, so old, and so profane. Shakespeare. H. IV.

Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him. Shak. R. II.

Thou'lt years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the wars surfeits to go rove with one That's yet unbruised. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Why, disease, dost thou molest
Ladies, and of them the best?
Do not men grow sick of rites,
To thy altars, by their nights Spent in surfeits? Ben. Johnson.

Surfeits many times turn to purges, both upwards and downwards. Dante's Natural History.

Peace, which he lov'd in life, did lend
Her hand to bring him to his end;
When age and death call'd for the score,
No surfeits were to reckon for. Crashaw.

Our father
Has ta'en himself a surfeit of the world,
And cries, it is not safe that we should taste it. Orway.

SURFEITER. n. f. [from surfeit.] One who riots; a glutton.
I did not think
This am'rous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm
For such a petty war. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

SURFEITWATER. n. f. [from surfeit and water.] Water that cures surfeits.
A little cold-distill'd poppywater, which is the true surfeit- water, with ease and abstinence, often ends distempers in the beginning. Locke.

SURGE. n. f. [from surge, Latin.] A swelling sea; wave rolling above the general surface of the water; billow; wave.
The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any. Spenser.

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main,
Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
And quench the guards of the ever-fired pole:
I never did like molestation view
On the enchain'd flood. Shakespeare. Othello.

He trod the waters,
Whose enmity he sung afide, and breast'd
The surge most swollen that met him. Shakespeare. Tempest.

It was formerly famous for the unfortunate loves of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncompassionate surges. Sandys.

The sulph'rous hail Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid
The fiery surge, that from the precipice
Of heav'n receiv'd us falling. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He sweeps the skies, and clears the cloudy North:
He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar
Purges the foaming surges to the shore. Dryden.

Thetis, near Ilium's swelling flood,
With dread beheld the rolling surges sweep
In heaps his slaughter'd sons into the deep. Pope.

TO SURGE. v. n. [from surge, Latin.] To swell; to rise high.
From midst of all the main
The surging waters like a mountain rise. Fairy Queen.

He, all in rage, his sea-god fire besought,
Some cur'd vengeance on his son to cast;
From surging gulfs two monsters straight were brought. F. 2.

Up from the bottom turn'd by furious winds
And surging waves, as mountains, to assault
Heav'n's height, and with the centre mix the pole. Milton.

Not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear,
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to thunders dash'd, th' assault renew,
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

4. To be surged. Certainly. This is a vitious expression: more properly be sure.
Objects of sense would then determine the views of all such,

SUSPICION. n. f. [suspicio, Fr. suspicio, Lat.] The act of suspecting; imagination of something ill without proof.
This suspicion Miso for the hoggish shrewdness of her brain, and Mopla for a very unlikely envy she hath stumbled upon. Sidney.

Suspicious amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight; they are to be repressed, or at the least well guarded, for they cloud the mind. Bacon.

Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes; For treason is but trusted like a fox, Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up, Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakespeare.

Though wisdom wake, suspicious sleeps At widom's gate; and to simplicity Reigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill Where no ill seems. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SUSPICIOUS. adj. [suspicius, Latin.]
1. Inclined to suspect; inclined to imagine ill without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury, will for ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects. South's Sermons.

A wife man will find us to be rogues by our faces; we have a suspicious, fearful, constrained countenance, often turning and looking through narrow lanes. Swift.

2. Liable to suspicion; giving reason to imagine ill.
They, because the light of his candle too much drowned theirs, were glad to lay hold on so colourable matter, and exceeding forward to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovations. Hooker.

I spy a black suspicious threatening cloud, That will encounter with our glorious sun. Shakespeare.

Authors are suspicious, nor greedily to be swallowed, who pretend to deliver antipathies, lymphatics and the occult abstrusities of things. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

His life Private, unactive, calm, contemplative, Little suspicious to any king. Milton.

Many mischievous insects are daily at work, to make people of merit suspicious of each other. Pope.

SUSPICIOUSLY. adv. [from suspicious.]
1. With suspicion.

2. So as to raise suspicion.
His guard entering the place, found Plangus with his sword in his hand, but not naked, but standing suspiciously enough, to one already suspicious. Sidney.

SUSPICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from suspicius.] Tending to suspicion.
To make my estate known seemed impossible, by reason of the suspiciousness of Miso, and my young mistress. Sidney.

SUSPIRATION. n. f. [suspirstio, Latin.] Sigh; act of fetching the breath deep.

Not customary suits of solemn black, Nor windy suspiration of forced breath That can denote me truly. Shakespeare.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulphs of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love or sorrow. More.

TO SUSPIRE. v. n. [suspire, Latin.]
1. To sigh; to fetch the breath deep.

2. It seems in Shakespeare to mean only, to begin to breathe; perhaps mistaken for respire.
Since the birth of Cain, the first male child, To him that did but yesterday suspire, There was not such a gracious creature born. Shakespeare.

TO SUSTAIN. v. a. [sustener, Fr. sustener, Latin.]
1. To bear; to prop; to hold up.

The largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More.

Vain is the force of man, To crush the pillars that the pile sustain. Dryden's Æneid.

SUSTENANCE. n. f. [sustenance, Fr.]
1. Support; maintenance.

Scarcely allowing himself fit sustenance of life, rather than he would spend those goods for whose sake only he seemed to joy in life. Sidney.

There are unto one end fundry means; as for the sustent of our bodies many kinds of food, many sorts of raiment to clothe our nakedness. Hooker.

Is then the honour of your daughter of greater moment to her, than to my daughter her's, whose sustenance it was? Add.

2. Necessaries of life; victuals.
The experiment cost him his life for want of sustenance. L'E.

The ancients were inventors of all arts necessary to life and sustenance, as plowing and sowing. Temple.

SUSTENTATION. n. f. [sustentation, Fr. from sustente, Latin.]
1. Support; preservation from falling.

These steams once raised above the earth, have their ascent and sustentation aloft promoted by the air. Boyle.

2. Support of life; use of victuals.
A very abstemious animal, by reason of its frigidity, and latancy in the winter, will long subsist without a visible sustentation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Maintenance.
When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation; it is of necessity that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

SUSURRATION. n. f. [from susurro, Latin.] Whisper; soft murmur.

SUTE. n. f. [for suite.] Sort.
Touching matters belonging to the church of Christ, this we conceive that they are not of one sute. Hooker.

SUTLER. n. f. [sutele, Dutch; sudler, German.] A man that sells provisions and liquor in a camp.

I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue. Shakespeare. Hen. V.

Send to the sutler's; there you're sure to find The bully match'd with rascals of his kind. Dryden.

SUTURE. n. f. [sutura, Latin.]
1. A manner of sewing or stitching, particularly of stitching wounds.

Wounds, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation: to maintain this situation, several sorts of sutures have been invented; those now chiefly described are the interrupted, the glovers, the quill'd, the twisted and the dry sutures, but the interrupted and twisted are almost the only useful ones. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Suture is a particular articulation: the bones of the cranium are joined to one another by four sutures. Quincy.

Many of our vessels degenerate into ligaments, and the sutures of the skull are abolished in old age. Albucasis.

SWAB. n. f. [swabb, Swedish.] A kind of mop to clean floors.

TO SWAB. v. a. [sweban, Saxon.] To clean with a mop. It is now used chiefly at sea.

TO SWADDLE. v. a. [sweban, Saxon.]
1. To swathe; to bind in cloaths, generally used of binding newborn children.

Invested by a veil of clouds, And swaddled as new-born in fable throuds; For these a receptacle I design'd. Sandys. How

S W A

How soon doth man decay!
When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets,
To swaddle infants, whose young breaths
Scarce knows the way;
Those cloths are little winding sheets,
Which do consign and fend them unto death.
They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about an hundred yards of fwathe.
2. To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous word.
Great on the bench, great in the saddle,
That could as well bind o'er as swaddle.
SWADDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Cloths bound round the body.
I begged them to uncase me: no, no, say they; and upon that carried me to one of their houses, and put me to bed in all my swaddles.
SWADDLING-BAND. n. f. [from swaddle.] Cloth wrapped SWADDLING-CLOATH. n. f. round a new-born child.
From thence a fairy thee unwitting rest,
There as thou slept'st in tender swaddlingband,
And her base elfin brood, there for thee left,
Such men do changelings call, to changed by fairies theft.
That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-elms.
The swaddlingbands were purple, wrought with gold.
To SWAG. v. n. [from swag, Saxon; swagga, Islandick.] To sink down by its weight; to lay heavy.
They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with their points, than in the jacent posture, and crevice the wall.
Being a tall fish, and with his sides much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and another answering to it on his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides.
To SWAGE. v. a. [from affuage.] To ease; to soften; to mitigate.
Apt words have pow'r to swage
The tumours of a troubled mind,
And are as balm to fester'd wounds.
Nor wanting pow'r to mitigate and swage,
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chafe
Anguish, and doubt, and fear from mortal minds.
I will love thee,
Though my distracted senses should forsake me,
I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
Should swage itself, and be let loose to thine.
To SWAGGER. v. n. [from swagger, Dutch, to make a noise; from swag, Saxon.] To bluster; to bully; to be turbulently and impudently proud and insolent.
Drunk? squabble? swagger? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of wine! Shak.
'Tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swaggers'd with me last night.
Oft a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twang'd off, gives manhood more approbation than proof itself.
The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for opinions, and to boast infallibility of knowledge.
Many such asses in the world huff, look big, stare, dress, cock, and swagger at the same noisy rate.
He chuck'd,
And scarcely deign'd to set a foot to ground,
But swaggers'd like a lord.
Confidence, how weakly forever founded, hath some effect upon the ignorant, who think there is something more than ordinary in a swaggering man that talks of nothing but demonstration.
To be great, is not to be starched, and formal, and superci-lous; to swagger at our footmen, and browbeat our infe-riors.
What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause? to swagger at the bar? for a lawyer I was born, and a lawyer I will be.
SWAGGERER. n. f. [from swagger.] A blusterer; a bully; a turbulent noisy fellow.
He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater: you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound.
SWAGGY. adj. [from swag.] Dependent by its weight.
The beaver is called animal ventricosum, from his swaggy and prominent belly.
SWAIN. n. f. [from swain, Saxon and Runick.]
1. A young man.
That good knight would not so nigh repair,
Himself estranging from their joyance vain,
Whose fellowship seem'd far unfit for warlike swain.
2. A country servant employed in husbandry.
It were a happy life
To be no better than a homely swain.
3. A pastoral youth.
Blest swains! whose nymphs in ev'ry grace excel;
Blest nymphs! whose swains those graces sing so well.

S W A

SWAINMOTE. n. f. [from swainmote, law Lat.] A court touching matters of the forest, kept by the charter of the forest three times in the year. This court of swainmote is as incident to a forest, as the court of piepowder is to a fair. The swainmote is a court of freeholders within the forest.
To SWALE. v. a. [from swale, Saxon, to kindle.] To waste or
To SWEAL. v. a. blaze away; to melt; as, the candle swales.
SWALLET. n. f. Among the tin-miners, water breaking in upon the miners at their work.
SWALLOW. n. f. [from swallow, Saxon.] A small bird of passage, or, as some say, a bird that lies hid and sleeps in the winter.
The swallow follows not Summer more willingly than we your lordship.
Daffodils,
That come before the swallow dars,
The swallows make use of celandine, and the linner of eupragia.
When swallows fleet foat high and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear.
The swallow swoops
The slimy pool, to build his hanging house Intent.
To SWALLOW. v. a. [from swallow, Saxon; swelgen, Dutch.]
1. To take down the throat.
I swallow down my spite.
If little faults
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
Whose capital crimes chew'd the swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us?
Men are, at a venture, of the religion of the country; and must therefore swallow down opinions, as silly people do em-piricks pills, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure.
2. To receive without examination.
Consider and judge of it as a matter of reason, and not swallow it without examination as a matter of faith.
3. To engross; to appropriate.
Far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy.
Homer excels all the inventors of other arts in this, that he has swallowed up the honour of those who succeeded him.
4. To absorb; to take in; to sink in any abyss; to engulf.
Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, though the yelty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up.
I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.
Death is swallowed up in victory.
If the earth open her mouth and swallow them up, ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord.
In bogs swallow'd up and lost.
He hid many things from us, not that they would swallow up our understanding, but divert our attention from what is more important.
Nature would abhor
To be forced back again upon herself,
And like a whirlpool swallow her own streams.
Should not the sad occasion swallow up
My other cares, and draw them all into it?
Cities overturn'd,
And late at night in swallowing earthquake funk.
5. To devour; to destroy.
The necessary provision for life swallows the greatest part of their time.
Corruption swallow'd what the liberal hand
Of bounty scatter'd.
6. To be lost in any thing; to be given up.
The priest and the prophet are swallow'd up of wine.
SWALLOW. n. f. [from the verb.] The throat; voracity.
Had this man of merit and mortification been called to account for his ungodly swallows, in gorging down the estates of helpless widows and orphans, he would have told them that it was all for charitable uses.
SWALLOWTAIL. n. f. A species of willow.
The shining willow they call swallowtail, because of the pleasure of the leaf.
SWALLOWWORT. n. f. A plant.
SWAMP. The preterite of swim.
SWAMP. n. f. [from swamp, Gothick; swamp, Saxon; swamm, Islandick; swamm, Dutch; swamp, Danish; swamp, Swedish.]
A marsh; a bog; a fen.
SWAMPY. adj. [from swamp.] Boggy; fenny.
Swampy fens breathe destructive myriads.
SWAN. n. f. [from swan, Saxon; swan, Danish; swan, Dutch.]
The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long and very straight neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young.
Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it: the two sides below its eyes are black and shining like ebony. Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water.

S W A

feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous.
With untainted eye
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.
Let music sound, while he doth make his choice;
Then if he lose, he makes a swan like end.
I have seen a swan,
With bootless labour, swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.
The birds easy to be drawn are plainpates, or water-fowl,
as the mallard, goose, and swan.
The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring pool refutes, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans returning to the floods.
The idea, which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise.
SWASKIN. n. f. [from swan and skin.] A kind of soft flannel, imitating for warmth the down of a swan.
SWAP. adv. [from swapa, to do at a snatch, Islandick.] Hastily; with hasty violence: as, he did it swap. A low word.
To SWAP. v. a. To exchange. See SWOP.
SWARD. n. f. [from sward, Swedish.]
1. The skin of bacon.
2. The surface of the ground: whence green sward, or green sword.
Water, kept too long, loosens and softens the sward, makes it subject to rushes and coarse grass.
The noon of night was past, when the foe
Came dreading o'er the level swart, that lies Between the wood and the swift streaming Ouse.
To plant a vineyard in July, when the earth is very dry and combustible, plow up the swarth, and burn it.
SWARTH. The preterite of swart.
SWARM. n. f. [from swarm, Saxon; swarm, Dutch.]
1. A great body or number of bees or other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.
A swarm of bees that cut the liquid fly,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight.
2. A multitude; a crowd.
From this swarm of fair advantages,
You grip'd the general sway into your hand,
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster.
If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found.
To SWARM. v. n. [from swarm, Saxon; swarmen, Dutch.]
1. To rise as bees in a body, and quit the hive.
All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long Summer's day;
Some found the trumpet for the rest to swarm.
Swarm'd on a rotten tick the bees I spy'd.
When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise,
if the weather hold.
2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.
The mercilefs Macdonel,
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon.
Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle.
What a multitude of thoughts at once Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear
What from without comes often to my ears.
Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the shrine;
In crowds around the swarming people join.
3. To be crowded; to be over-run; to be thronged.
These garbions you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers.
Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl, her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals.
Those days swarm'd with fables, and from such grounds took hints for fictions, poisoning the world ever after.
4. To breed multitudes.
Not so thick swarm'd once the foil Bedropp'd with blood of Gorgon.
SWART. adj. [from swart, Gothick; swarte, Saxon; swart, Dutch.]
1. Black; darkly brown; tawney.
A nation strange, with visage swart,
And courage fierce, that all men did affray,
Through the world then swarmed in every part.

S W A

A man
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hute,
That him full of melancholy did shew.
Whereas I was black and swart before;
With those clear rays which the infus'd on me,
That beauty am I blest with; which you see,
No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.
2. In Milton it seems to signify black; gloomy; malignant.
Ye valleys low,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparsely looks.
To SWART. v. a. [from the noun.] To blacken; to dusk.
The heat of the sun may swart a living part, or even black a dead or dissolving flesh.
SWARTHILY. adv. [from swarth.] Blackly; duskyly; taw-nily.
SWARTHINESS. n. f. [from swarth.] Darkness of complexion;
tawnyness.
SWARTHY. adj. [See SWART.] Dark of complexion; black;
dusky; tawney.
Set me where, on some pathless plain,
The swarth Africans complain.
Though in the torrid climates the common colour is black or swarthy, yet the natural colour of the temperate climates is more transparent and beautiful.
Here swarthy Charles appears, and there
His brother with dejected air.
Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him;
Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the wars,
And making death more grim.
SWASH. n. f. [A cant word.] A figure, whose circumference is not round, but oval; and whose moldings lie not at right angles, but oblique to the axis of the work.
To SWASH. v. n. To make a great clatter or noise: whence swashbuckler.
We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances.
Draw, if you be men: Gregory, remember thy swashing blow.
SWASHER. n. f. [from swash.] One who makes a show of valour or force of arms.
I have observed these three swashers; three such antics do not amount to a man.
SWATCH. n. f. A swatch. Not in use.
One spreadeth those bands so in order to lie,
As barle in swatches may fill it thereby.
SWATH. n. f. [from swath, Dutch.]
1. A line of grass cut down by the mower.
With toiling and raking, and setting on cox,
Grass, lately in swaths, is meat for an ox.
The strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath.
As soon as your grass is mown, if it lie thick in the swath, neither air nor sun can pass freely through it.
2. A continued quantity.
An affection'd ass, that cons state without book, and utters it by great swaths.
3. [Spear, to bind, Saxon.] A band; a fillet.
An Indian comb, a stick whereof is cut into three sharp and round teeth four inches long: the other part is left for the handle, adorned with fine straws laid along the sides, and lapped round about it in several distinct swaths.
They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, which they folded about me, till they had wrapped me in above an hundred yards of swathe.
To SWATHE. v. a. [from swath, Saxon.] To bind, as a child with bands and rollers.
Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swathing cloaths,
This infant warrior, and his enterprizes, Discomfited great Douglas.
He had two sons; the eldest of them at three years old,
I th' swathing cloaths the other, from their nursery
Were stol'n.
Their children are never swathed, or bound about with any thing, when they are first born; but are put naked into the bed with their parents to lie.
Swath'd in her lap the bold nurse bore him out,
With olive branches cover'd round about.
Master's feet are swath'd no longer,
If in the night too oft he kicks,
Or shows his loco-motive tricks.
To SWAY. v. a. [from swaen, German, to move.]
1. To wave in the hand; to move or wield with facility: as, to sway the scepter.
Glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil rise,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd.

SWE

2. To bias; to direct to either side.
Heav'n forgive them, that so much have sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me. Shakespeare.
I took your hands; but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar. Shakespeare.
The only way to improve our own,
By dealing faithfully with none;
As bows run true by being made.
On purpose false, and to be sway'd. Hudibras.
3. To govern; to rule; to overpower; to influence.
The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakespeare.
The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says, you are the worthier maid. Shakespeare.
On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway
The world. Milton's Paradise Lost.
A gentle nymph, not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream, Sabrina is her name. Milton.
Take heed lest passion sway
Thy judgment to do ought, which else free will Would not admit. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The judgment is sway'd by passion, and stored with lubricious opinions, instead of clearly conceived truths. Glavin.
This was the race
To sway the world, and land and sea subdued. Dryden.
With these I went,
Nor idle stood with unafflicting hands,
When savage beasts, and men more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd; yet those I sway'd
With powerful speech: I spoke, and they obey'd. Dryden.
When examining these matters, let not temporal and little advantages sway you against a more durable interest. Tillotson.
- TO SWAY. v. n.
1. To hang heavy; to be drawn by weight.
In these personal respects, the balance sways on our part. Bacon.
2. To have weight; to have influence.
The example of sundry churches, for approbation of one thing, doth sway much; but yet still as having the force of an example only, and not of a law. Hooker.
3. To bear rule; to govern.
The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear. Shakespeare.
Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
They never then had sprung like summer flies. Shakespeare.
Aged tyranny sways not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Were thou shalt monarch reign;
There didst not: there let him still victor sway. Milton.
- SWAY. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The swing or sweep of a weapon.
To strike with huge two-handed sway. Milton.
2. Any thing moving with bulk and power.
Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth Shakes like a thing unfirm? Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar.
Expert
When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway
Of battle. Milton.
3. Power; rule; dominion.
This sort had some fear that the filling up the seats in the confistory, with so great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat. Hooker.
In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none, saving that some fell sooner, and some later, from the foundnels of belief. Hooker.
Only retain
The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of th' helm, Beloved sons, be yours. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Her father counts it dangerous
That she should give her sorrow so much sway,
And in his wisdom halts our marriage.
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.
Too truly Tamerlane's successors they;
Each thinks a world too little for his sway. Dryden. Aurengze.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison's Cato.
4. Influence; direction.
An evil mind in authority doth not only follow the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to itself new desires, not before thought of. Sidney.
They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.
- TO SWEAR. v. n. preter. swore or swear'd; part. pass. sworn. [swaran, Gothic; swepan, Saxon; sweren, Dutch.]
1. To oblige some superior power; to utter an oath.
If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numb.
Thee, thee an hundred languages shall claim,
And savage Indians swear by Anna's name. Titchel.

SWE

2. To declare or promise upon oath.
We shall have old swearing
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outwear them too. Shakespeare.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands,
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
Nor pluck it from his finger. Shakespeare.
I would have kept my word;
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Jacob said, swear to me; and he swore unto him. Gen.
Bacchus taken at Rhodes by Demetrius Poliorcetes, which he so esteemed, that, as Plutarch reports, he swore he had rather lose all his father's images than that table. Peasam.
3. To give evidence upon oath.
At what case
Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
4. To oblige the great name profanely.
Because of swearing the land mourneth. Jer. xxiii. 10.
Obey thy parents, keep thy word justly;
Swear not. Shakespeare. King Lear.
None so nearly disposed to scoffing at religion as those who have accustomed themselves to swear on trifling occasions. Tillotson.
- TO SWEAR. v. a.
1. To put to an oath.
Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel. Ex. xiii. 19.
Sworn afore, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Let me swear you all to secrecy;
And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryden.
2. To declare upon oath.
3. To oblige by an oath.
Now by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
—O vassal! miscreant! Shakespeare.
- SWEARER. n. f. [from swear.] A wretch who obtains the great name wantonly and profanely.
And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?
—Every one.
—Who must hang them?
—Why, the honest men.
—Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men and hang them up. Shakespeare.
Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain;
It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse:
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain;
But the cheap swearer through his open sluice
Lets his soul run for nought. Herbert.
Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer; for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Brown.
It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Swift's Polite Conversation.
- SWEAT. n. f. [swēat, Saxon; swēet, Dutch.]
1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.
Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is excreted. Bacon.
Some insensible effluvia, exhaling out of the stone, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals. Boyle.
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat. Milton.
When Lucilius brandishes his pen,
And flashes in the face of guilty men,
A cold sweat stands in drops on ev'ry part,
And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart. Dryden.
Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists, so as that projected motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Arb.
2. Labour; toil; drudgery.
This painful labour of abridging was not easy, but a matter of sweat and watching. 2 Mac. ii. 26.
The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd.
What from Johnson's oil and sweat did flow,
Or what more easy nature did bestow
On Shakespeare's gentler muse, in these full grown Their graces both appear. Denham.
3. Evaporation of moisture.
Beans give in the mow; and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed 'till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- TO SWEAT. v. n. preterite swet, sweated; particip. pass. sweating. [from the noun.]
1. To be moist on the body with heat or labour.
Shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heirs?
Why sweat they under burdens? Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
Mistress

SWE

- Mistress Page at the door, sweating and blowings, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakespeare.
When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stir'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakespeare. H. VIII.
About this time in autumn, there reigned in the city and other parts of the kingdom a disease then new; which, of the accidents and manner thereof they called the sweating sickness. Bacon's Henry VII.
- A young tall squire
Did from the camp at first before him go;
At first he did, but scarce could follow strait;
Sweating beneath a shield's unruly weight. Cowley.
2. To toil; to labour; to drudge.
How the drudging goblin stirs
To earn his cream-bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thrash'd the corn. Milton.
Our author, not content to ice
That others write as carelessly as he;
Though he pretends not to make things complete,
Yet, to please you, he'd have the poets sweat. Waller.
3. To emit moisture.
Waincots will sweat so that they will run with water.
In cold evenings there will be a moisture or sweating upon the stool. Mortimer.
- TO SWEAT. v. a. To emit as sweat.
Grease that's sweaten
From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
For him the rich Arabia sweats her gum. Dryden.
- SWEATER. n. f. [from sweat.] One who sweats.
SWEATY. adj. [from sweat.]
1. Covered with sweat; moist with sweat.
The rabblement houted and clapp'd their chop'd hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps. Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar.
A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf. Milton.
2. Consisting of sweat.
And then, so nice, and so genteel,
Such cleanliness from head to heel;
No humours gross, or flow'ry steams,
No noisome whiffs, or sweaty streams. Swift.
3. Laborious; toilsome.
Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleaming armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.
- TO SWEAT. v. a. [swapan, Saxon.]
1. To drive away with a besom.
2. To clean with a besom.
What woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one, doth not sweep the house, and seek diligently 'till she find it? Lu. xv. 8.
3. To carry with pomp.
Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not. Shakespeare. H. VI.
4. To drive or carry off with celerity and violence.
Though I could,
With barefaced power, sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not. Shakespeare. H. VI.
The river of Kithon swept them away. Jud. v.
The blustering winds striving for victory, swept the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down into the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive. Kneller's History of the Turks.
- Flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow;
They miss or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.
My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince. Dryden.
I have already swept the flakes, and with the common good fortune of prosperous gamblers can be content to sit. Dryden.
Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish? Dryden.
Fool! time no change of motion knows;
With equal speed the torrent flows
To sweep fumes, pow'rs, and wealth away:
The past is all by death possess'd,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving, bids them live, to day. Fenton.
A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm swept a great deal of it into his hat. Swift.
5. To pass over with celerity and force.
6. To rub over.
Their long descending train
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires swept the plain. Dryden.

SWE

7. To strike with long stroke.
Descend ye nine; descend and sing;
The breathing instruments inspire,
Wake into voice each silent string,
And sweep the foundling lyre. Pope.
- TO SWEEP. v. n.
1. To pass with violence, tumult, or swiftness.
Haste me to know it, that I with wings as swift
As meditation or the thoughts of love
May sweep to my revenge. Shakespeare.
A poor man that oppresseth the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food. Prov. xxviii. iii.
Before tempestuous winds arise,
Stars shooting through the darkness gild the night
With sweeping glories and long trails of light. Dryden.
2. To pass with pomp; to pass with an equal motion.
She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
More like an empress than duke Humphrey's wife. Shakespeare.
In gentle dreams I often will be by,
And sweep along before your closing eye. Dryden.
3. To move with a long reach.
Nor always errs; for oft the gauntlet draws
A sweeping stroke along the crackling jaws. Dryden.
- SWEEP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of sweeping.
2. The compass of any violent or continued motion.
A door drags when by its ill hanging on its hinges, or by the ill boarding of the room the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Milton's Mechan. Exercise.
Lion-hearted Richard like a torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves Within its sweep, trees, houses, men. Philips.
3. Violent destruction.
In countries subject to great epidemical sweeps, men may live very long, but where the proportion of the chonical distemper is great, it is not likely to be so. Graunt.
4. Direction of any motion not rectilinear.
Having made one incision a little circularly, begin a second, bringing it with an opposite sweep to meet the other. Sharp.
- SWEPTINGS. n. f. [from sweep.] That which is swept away.
Should this one broomstick enter the scene, covered with dust, though the sweepings of the finest lady's chamber, we should despise its vanity. Swift.
- SWEETNET. n. f. [sweep and net.] A net that takes in a great compass.
She was a sweetnet for the Spanish ships, which happily fell into her net. Camden.
- SWEETSTAKE. n. f. [sweep and stake.] A man that wins all.
Is't writ in your revenge,
That sweepstake you will draw both friend and foe, Winner and loser. Shakespeare.
- SWEET'RY. adj. [from sweep.] Passing with great speed and violence over a great compass at once.
They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.
- SWEET. adj. [swete, Sax. soet, Dutch.]
1. Pleasing to any sense.
Sweet expresses the pleasant perceptions of almost every sense: sugar is sweet, but it hath not the same sweetness as musick; nor hath musick the sweetness of a rose, and a sweet prospect differs from them all: nor yet have any of these the same sweetness as discourse, counsel, or meditation hath; yet the royal Psalmist faith of a man, we took sweet counsel together; and of God, my meditation of him shall be sweet. Watts.
2. Luscious to the taste.
This honey, tasted still is ever sweet. Davies.
3. Fragrant to the smell.
Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet. Shakespeare.
Where a rainbow hangeth over or toucheth, there breatheth a sweet smell; for that this happeneth but in certain matters which have some sweetness which the dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.
Shred very small with thyme sweet-margory and a little winter favoury. Waller's Angler.
The balmy zephyrs, silent since her death,
Lament the ceasing of a sweeter breath.
The streets with treble voices ring,
To sell the bounteous product of the spring;
Sweet-smelling flow'rs, and elders early bud. Gay.
4. Melodious to the ear.
The dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop.
Her speech is grac'd with sweeter sound
Than in another's song is found. Milton.
No more the streams their murmurs shall forbear
A sweeter musick than their own to hear;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal shore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and musick is no more. Pope.
5. Pleasing

SWE

5. Pleasing to the eye.
Heav'n blest thee!
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on. Shakespeare.
6. Not salt.
The white of an egg, or blood mingled with salt water, gathers the fatness and maketh the water sweeter; this may be by adhesion.
The falls drop with rain, Bacon's Natural History.
Sweet waters mingle with the briny main. Dryden.
7. Not sour.
Time changeth fruits from more sour to more sweet; but contrariwise liquors, even those that are of the juice of fruit, from more sweet to more sour. Bacon's Natural History.
Trees whose fruit is acid last longer than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon.
When metals are dissolved in acid menstrooms, and the acids in conjunction with the metal act after a different manner, so that the compound has a different taste, much milder than before, and sometimes a sweet one; is it not because the acids adhere to the metallic particles, and thereby lose much of their activity. Newton's Opticks.
8. Mild; soft; gentle.
Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness. Shakespeare.
The Pelicades shedding sweet influence. Milton.
Mercy has, could mercy's self be seen,
No sweeter look than this propitious queen. Waller.
9. Grateful; pleasing.
Sweet interchange of hill and valley. Milton.
Euryalus,
Than whom the Trojan host
No fairer face or sweeter air could boast. Dryden's Æneid.

- SWEET. n. f.
1. Sweetness; something pleasing.
Pluck out
The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
What softer sounds are these salute the ear,
From the large circle of the hemisphere,
As if the center of all sweets met here! Ben. Johnson.
Hail! wedded love,
Perpetual fountain of domestic sweets! Milton.
Taught to live
The easiest way; nor with perplexing thoughts
To interrupt the sweet of life. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Now since the Larian and the Trojan brood
Have tasted vengeance, and the sweets of blood, Speak. Dryden's Æneid.
Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryden.
We have so great an abhorrence of pain, that a little of it extinguishes all our pleasures; a little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet. Locke.
Love had ordain'd that it was Abra's turn
To mix the sweets, and minister the urn. Prior.
2. A word of endearment.
Sweet! leave me here a while
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious watch with sleep. Shakespeare.
Wherefore frowns my sweet?
Have I too long been absent from these lips? Ben. Johnson.
3. A perfume.
As in perfumes,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musick or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all.
So she was all a sweet. Dryden.
Flowers
Innumerable, by the soft fourth-west
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands, Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.
- SWEETBREAD. n. f. The pancreas of the calf.
Never tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digesture, as veal, pullets, or sweetbreads. Harvey on Consumption.
Sweetbread and collops were with skewers prick'd
About the sides; imbibing what they deck'd. Dryden.
When you roast a breast of veal, remember your sweetheart the butler loves a sweetbread. Swift.
- SWEETBRIAR. n. f. [sweet and briar.] A fragrant shrub.
For March come violets and peach-tree in blossom, the cornucopia-tree in blossom, and sweetbriar. Bacon.
- SWEETBROOM. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
- SWEETCELY. n. f. [Myrrhis] A plant.
The characters are; it is an umbelliferous plant, with a rose-shaped flower, consisting of several unequal petals or flower-leaves that are placed circularly, and rest upon the em-palement, which turns to a fruit, composed of two seeds resembling a bird's bill, channelled and gibbous on one side, but plain on the other. Miller.

SWE

- To SWEETEN. v. a. [from sweet.]
1. To make sweet.
The world the garden is; she is the flow'r
That sweetens all the place; she is the guest Of rarest price. Sidney.
Here is the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Shakespeare.
Give me an ounce of civet to sweeten my imagination. Shakespeare's King Lear.
With fairest flow'r's Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Be humbly minded, know your post;
Sweeten your tea, and watch your toast. Swift.
2. To make mild or kind.
All kindnesses descend upon such a temper, as rivers of fresh waters falling into the main sea; the sea swallows them all, but is not changed or sweetened by them. South's Sermon.
3. To make less painful.
She the sweetness of my heart, even sweetens the death
which her sweetness brought upon me. Sidney.
Thou shalt secure her helpless sex from harms,
And the thy cares will sweeten with her charms. Dryden.
Interest of state and change of circumstances may have sweetened these reflections to the politic fort, but impressions are not so easily worn out of the minds of the vulgar. Addison.
Thy mercy sweet and ev'ry foil,
Made ev'ry region please;
The hoary Alpin hills it warm'd,
And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas. Addison's Spectator.
4. To palliate; to reconcile.
These lessons may be gilt and sweetened as we order pills and potions, so as to take off the disgust of the remedy. L'Estr.
5. To make grateful or pleasing.
I would have my love
Angry sometimes, to sweeten off the rest
Of her behaviour. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
6. To soften; to make delicate.
Corregio has made his memory immortal, by the strength he has given to his figures, and by sweetening his lights and shadows, and melting them into each other so happily, that they are even imperceptible. Dryden's Dunciad.
- To SWEETEN. v. n. To grow sweet.
Where a wasp hath bitten in a grape, or any fruit, it will sweeten hastily. Bacon's Natural History.
- SWEETENER. n. f. [from sweeten.]

quickly returned. Sidney.
Why all the charges of the nuptial feast,
Wine and dainties, and sweetmeats to digest. Dryden.
There was plenty, but the dishes were ill fort'd; whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women, but little solid meat for men. Dryden.
Make your transparent sweetmeats truly nice,
With Indian sugar and Arabian spice. King's Cookery.
If a child cries for any unwholesome fruit, you purchase his quiet by giving him a less hurtful sweetmeat: this may preserve his health, but spoils his mind. Locke.
At a lord mayor's feast, the sweetmeats do not make their appearance till people are cloyed with beef and mutton. Addison.
They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting;
but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to bring any presents of toys or sweetmeats. Gallio's Travels.

in any of its senses; fragrance; melody; lusciousness; deliciousness; agreeableness; delightfulness; gentleness of manners; mildness of aspect.
She the sweetness of my heart, even sweetening the death
which her sweetness brought upon me. Sidney.
The right form, the true figure, the natural colour that is fit and due to the dignity of a man, to the beauty of a woman, to the sweetness of a young babe. Ascham.
O our lives sweetens!
That we the pain of death would hourly bear,
Rather than die at once. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Where a rainbow toucheth, there breatheth forth a sweet smell: for this happeneth but in certain matters, which have in themselves some sweetness, which the gentle dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.
Serene and clear harmonious Horace flows,
With sweetest not to be express in prose. Roscommon.
Suppose two authors equally sweet, there is a great distinction to be made in sweetness; as in that of sugar and that of honey. Dryden.
This old man's talk, though honey flow'd
In every word, would now lose all its sweetness. Addison.
Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly flow;
And praise the easy vigor of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.
A man of good education, excellent understanding, and exact taste; these qualities are adorned with great modesty and a most amiable sweetness of temper. Swift.

Unhurt by southern show'rs or northern hail. Dryden.
2. To deviate; to depart from rule, custom or duty.
That which angels do clearly behold, and without any swerving observe, is a law celestial and heavenly. Hooker.
Howsoever these swervings are now and then incident into the course of nature, nevertheless so constantly the laws of nature are by natural agents observed, that no man denieth;
but those things which nature worketh are wrought either always, or for the most part after one and the same manner. Hooker.
The ungodly have laid a snare for me; but yet I swerve not from thy commandments. Common Prayer.
Were I crown'd the most imperial monarch,
Thereof most worthy, were I the fairest youth
That ever made the eye swerve,
I would not prize them without her love. Shakespeare.
There is a protection very just which princes owe to their servants, when, in obedience to their just commands, upon extraordinary occasions, in the execution of their trusts, they swerve from the strict letter of the law. Clarendon.
Till then his majesty had not in the least swerved from that act of parliament. Clarendon.
Annihilation in the course of nature, defect and swerving in the creature without the sin of man would immediately follow. Haleswill on Providence.

S W I

- Firm we subsist, yet possible to swerve. Milton.
Many who, through the contagion of ill example, swerve exceedingly from the rules of their holy faith, yet would upon such an extraordinary warning be brought to comply with them. Atterbury's Sermons.

er; a parasite.

Accusing sycophants, of all men, did best fort to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants, because of no evil they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more fecure, while the fear he had figur'd in his mind had any possibility of event. 2

Men know themselves void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant, at the same time, both ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South.

To SYCOPHANT. v. n. [συκοφαντω; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again. Government of the Tongue.

SYCOPHANTICK. adj. [from sycophant.] Flattering; parasitical.

To SYCOPHANTISE. v. n. [συκοφαντω; from sycophant.] To play the flatterer. Diſt.

SYLLABICAL. adj. [from syllable.] Relating to syllables; consisting of syllables.

SYLLABICALLY. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

SYLLABICK. adj. [syllabique, French; from syllable.] Relating to syllables.

SYLLABLE. n. f. [συλλαβη; syllaba, French.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

I heard

Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakespeare.

There is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hooker.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,

Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;

And all our yesterday have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

He hath told so many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. Swift.

To SYLLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable mens names

On fads and fumes, and desert wildernesses. Milton.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [Rightly SYLLABUS, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabab made at the milking pail,

But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaumont.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabab and froth, without any solidity.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [συλλαβη; syllaba, French.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. f. [συλλογισμος; syllogisme, French.] An argument compos'd of three propositions: as, every man thinks;
Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

Unto them a piece of rhetoric is a sufficient argument of logic, an apologue of Aesop beyond a syllogism in Barbara.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint and steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms? Bentley.

SYLLOGISTICAL. adj. [συλλογιστικος; from syllogism.] Re-

SYLLOGISTIC. } relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the intire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism.

Since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistical form of a syllogism.

SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogisti-cally; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Locke.

To SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogizein, French; συλλογιζω.] To reason by syllogism.

Logic is, in effect, an art of syllogizing.

Men have endeavour'd to transform logic into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Baker.

SYLVAN. adj. [Better sylvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A sylvan scene! and as the ranks ascend,
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton's Paradise Lost.

S Y M

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,
Watch'd by the sylvan genius of the place. Pope.

SYLVAN. n. f. [sylvain, French.] A wood-god, or satyr.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring

To arched walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown, that sylvan loves,

Of pine or monumental oak. Milton.

Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side;

To lawless sylvans all access deny'd. Pope.

SYMBOL. n. f. [symbole, French; σύμβολον; symbolum, Latin.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real fums, so words and names pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.

The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning. Addison on ancient Medals.

SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, French; συμβολικος; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs.

By this inroad idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself. Brown.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed. Taylor.

SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals. Brown.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature and a sensible sermon. Taylor.

SYMBOLIZATION. n. f. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of Scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes rack'd beyond their symbolizations.

To SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symboliser, French; from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation. Bacon.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon's Natural History.

Aristotle and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another. Boyle.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Hewel.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism. Mora.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires. South's Sermons.

To SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours.

SYMMETRIAN. n. f. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.

SYMMETRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SYMMETRIST. n. f. [from symmetry.] One very studious or oblivious of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true.

SYMMETRY. n. f. [symmetria, French; συν and μετρον.]
Adaptation of parts to each other; proportion; harmony;
agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be

Examind, measure of all symmetry;

Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made

Of harmony, he would at next have said

That harmony was fire. Denne.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found

SYM

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense. More.
Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him. Dryden.
SYMPATHETICAL. adj. [sympathetique, Fr. from sympathy.]
SYMPATHETICK. s. Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the gross mistakes, in the cure of diseases, not only from the last medicine and sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Roscommon.
To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence. Glavin. Scyth.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best;
Your sympathetick hearts the hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love. Prior.
All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetick and vital passions produced within ourselves. Bentley.

SYMPATHETICALLY. adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

To SYMPATHIZE. v. n. [sympathiser, French; from sympathy.]
To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the maliffs in robbustious and rough coming on. Shakespeare.

The thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize. Shakespeare.
Nature, in awe to him,
Had doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.
Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Addison's Spectator.

Though the greatness of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none console and sympathize more heartily than they. Collier on Kindness.

SYMPATHY. n. f. [sympathie, French; συμπάθεια.] Fellowship; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakespeare. H. VI.
You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love lack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

But what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for sympathy. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

If there was a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it. Shakespeare.

I started back;
It started back: but pleas'd I soon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents: horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some connat'ral force,
Pow'ful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. Scott's Sermons.

Can kindness to desert, like your's, be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd;
For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such affections made in the minds of most men, and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Locke.

SYMPHONIOUS. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelick harmonies. Milton.

SYN

SYMPHONY. n. f. [symphonie, French; συμφωνία.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadth and heights, reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in light. Wotton.

Speak ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night, Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton's Par. Lost.

The trumpets found,
And warlike symphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SYMPHYSES. n. f. [σύν and φύσις.]
Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connatecy, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wilemon.

SYMPHYSIACK. adj. [sympphysiack, French; συμφυσις.] Relating to mery makings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and comotation, from the ancient custom of symphysiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In some of those symphysiack disputations amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietick part of medicine depended upon scientific principles. Arbutnot.

SYMPTOM. n. f. [symptomie, French; σύμπτωμα.] 1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

2. A sign; a token.
Ten glorious campaigns are pass'd, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Swift.

SYMPTOMATICAL. adj. [symptomatique, French; from symptom.] Happening concurrently, or occasionally.

Symptomatical is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatical, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplasim the swelling was dissipated; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatical, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wilemon's Surgery.

SYMPTOMATICALLY. adv. [from symptomatical.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wilemon.

SYNAGOGICAL. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE. n. f. [synagogue, French; συναγωγή.] An assembly of the Jews to worship. Shakespeare.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue.
As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath. Gospel.

SYNALEPHA. n. f. [συναλοιφή.] A contraction or excision of a syllable in a Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego.

Virgil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalepha's, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARTHROSIS. n. f. [σύν and ἄρθρον.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wilemon's Surgery.

SYNCHONDROSIS. n. f. [σύν and χόνδρος.] Conjunction of two bones.

Synchondrosis is an union by gillies of the sternon to the ribs. Wilemon.

SYNCHRONICAL. adj. [σύν and χρονικός.] Happening together at the same time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchRONICAL. Boyle.

SYNCHRONISM. n. f. [σύν and χρονισμός.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchRONISM of all the parts of the Mosical chronology, after the Flood, bears a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Hale.

SYNCHRONOUS. adj. [σύν and χρονικός.] Happening at the same time. The

SYN

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchRONOUS and proportional to their changes. Arbutnot on Air.

SYSCOPE. n. f. [synscope, French; συνσκόπη.] 1. Painting fit.

The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and synscope.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off part.

SYSCOPIST. n. f. [from synscope.] Contractor of words.

To outline all the modern synscopists, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Speculator that shall not have a single vowel in it.

To SYNDICATE. v. n. [syndiquer, French; σύν and δικαίνω.] To judge; to pass judgement on; to censure. An unusual word.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master and all law makers before him. Hakewill on Providence.

SYNDROME. n. f. [σύνδρομον.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependance on such a syndrome of prequired motions. Glavin's Scyth.

SYNECDOCHE. n. f. [synecdoche, French; συνεκδοχή.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirit changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

SYNECDOCHICAL. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synecdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal? Boyle's Seraphick Love.

SYNNYROSIS. n. f. [σύν and νύσιν.] 1. Synnyrosis is when the connexion is made by a ligament.

Of this in synnyrosis we find instances, in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulations it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibie. Wilemon's Surgery.

SYNOD. n. f. [synode, French; σύνδος.] 1. An assembly, particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used; and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synod been decreed,
I'll admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shakespeare.

The opinion was not only condemned by the synods, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Claveland.

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,
Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let us call to synod all the blest,
Through heav'n's wide bounds. Milton.

The second council of Nice he faith I most irreverently call that wise synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council. Stillingfleet.

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove!
And you bright synod of the pow'rs above,
On this my son your gracious gifts bestow. Dryden.

2. Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

How'er love's native hours are set,
Whatever flarry synod met,
'Tis in the mercy of her eye,
If poor love shall live or die. Crashaw.

Their planetary motions and aspects
Of noxious efficacy, and when to join
In synod unbegun. Milton.

As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors, were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions. Boyle.

SYR

SYNODAL. adj. [synodique, French; from synod.]

SYNODICAL. s. Relating to a synod; transacted in a synod.

1. Relating to a synod; transacted in a synod.
St. Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus. Stillingfleet.

2. [Synodique, French.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodick revolution of the moon measures the month. Helder.

The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes. Locke's Elements of Natural Philosophy.

SYNODICALLY. adv. [from synodical.] By the authority of a synod or publick assembly.

It shall be needful for those churches synodically to determine something in those points. Saunderson.

SYNONYMA. n. f. [Latin; συνώνυμος.] Names which signify the same thing.

To SYNONOMISE. v. a. [from synonymia.] To express the same thing in different words.

This word fortis we may synonymise after all these fashions, stout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, adventurous, brave, bold, daring, intrepid. Camden's Remains.

SYNONYMOUS. adj. [synonyme, Fr. συνώνυμος.] Expressing the same thing by different words.

These words consist of two propositions which are not distinct in sense, but one and the same thing variously expressed; for wisdom and understanding are synonymous words here. Tillot.

Fortune is but a synonymous word for nature and necessity. Bentley's Sermons.

When two or more words signify the same thing, as wave and billow, mead and meadow, they are usually called synonymous words. Watts's Logick.

SYNONYMY. n. f. [συνωνυμία.] The quality of expressing by different words the same thing.

SYNOPSIS. n. f. [σύνολος.] A general view; all the parts brought under one view.

SYNOPTICAL. adj. [from synopsis.] Affording a view of many parts at once.

We have collected so many synoptical tables, calculated for his monthly use. Brevint's Kalender.

SYNTACTICAL. adj. [from syntaxis, Latin.] 1. Conjoined; fitted to each other.

2. Relating to the construction of speech.

SYNTAX. s. [σύνταξις.] 1. A system; a number of things joined together.

They owe no other dependance to the first than what is common to the whole syntax of beings. Glavin.

2. That part of Grammar which teaches the construction of words.

I can produce a hundred instances to convince any reasonable man that they do not so much as understand common Grammar and syntax. Swift.

SYNTHE'SIS. n. f. [σύνθεσις.] The act of joining, opposed to analysis.

The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them, and proving the explanations. Newton's Opticks.

SYNTHE'TICK. adj. [συνθετικός.] Conjoining; compounding; forming composition.

Synthetic method is that which begins with the parts, and leads onward to the knowledge of the whole; it begins with the most simple principles and general truths, and proceeds by degrees to that which is drawn from them or compounded of them; and therefore it is called the method of composition. Watts's Logick.

SYPHON. n. f. [This should be written siphon; σιφών.] A tube; a pipe.

Take your glass, siphon, or crane, and draw it off from its last feces into small bottles. Mortimer.

SYRINGE. n. f. [σφύγγη.] A pipe through which any liquor is squirted.

The heart seems not designed to be the fountain or conservatory of the vital flame, but as a machine to receive the blood from the veins and force it out by the arteries through the whole body as a syringe doth any liquor, though not by the same artifice. Raj.

To SYRINGE. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To spout by a syringe.

A flux of blood from the nose, mouth, and eye was stoppt by the syringing up of oxyerate. Wilemon's Surgery.

2. To wash with a syringe.

SYRINGOTOMY. n. f. [σφύγγη and τέμνω.] The act or practice of cutting fistulas or hollow vessels. STRTS.

SYRTIS. n. f. [Latin.] A quick sand; a bog.
A boggy syrtis, neither sea, nor good dry land. Milton.

SYSTEM. n. f. [système, Fr. συστήμα.] 1. Any complexure or combination of many things acting together.

2. A scheme which reduces many things to regular dependence or co-operation.

3. A scheme which unites many things in order.

Aristotle brings morality into system, by treating of happiness under heads, and ranges it in classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds which had not been handled systematically before. Baker.

The best way to learn any science is to begin with a regular system, or a short and plain scheme of that science well drawn up into a narrow compass. Watts.

SYSTEMATICAL. adj. [système, Fr. συστηματικός; from system.] Methodical; written or formed with regular subordination of one part to another.

It will be necessary, in a discourse about the formation of the world, to give you a brief account of some of the most principal and systematical phenomena that occur in it. Bentley.

Now we deal much in essays, and unreasonably despise systematical learning; whereas our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems. Watts.

SYSTEMATICALLY. adv. [from systematical.] In form of a system.

I treat of the usefulness of writing books of essay, in comparison of that of writing systematically. Boyle.

Aristotle brings morality into system, and ranges it into classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before. Baker.

SYSTOLE. n. f. [συστολή, Fr. συστολή.]

1. [In anatomy.] The contraction of the heart.

The systole resembles the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural size. Ray.

2. [Συστολή, French.] In Grammar, the shortening of a long syllable.

TAB

T,

A consonant, which, at the beginning and end of words, has always the same sound nearly approaching to the d; but before an i, when followed by a vowel, has the sound of an oblique s: as, nation, salvation, except when s precedes t: as, Christian, question.

TA'BBY. n. f. [tabi, tabino, Italian; tabis, French.] A kind of waved silk.

Brocades, and tabies, and gauzes. Swift.

TA'BBY. adj. Brinded; brindled; varied with different colours.

A tabby cat fat in the chimney-corner. Addison.

On her tabby rival's face,

She deep will mark her new disgrace. Prior.

TABEFACITION. n. f. [tabefacio, Latin.] The act of wasting away.

To TA'BEFY. v. n. [tabefacio, Latin.] To waste; to be extenuated by disease. In the following example it is improperly a verb active.

The lovers walking in that am'rous shade. Waller.
3. Sturdy; lusty.
I'll swear thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk; but I would thou wouldst be a tall fellow of thy hands. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
- TALLAGE. n. f. [tallage, French.] Impost; exche.
The people of Spain were better affected unto Philip than to Ferdinand, because he had imposed upon them many taxes and tallages. Bacon's Henry VII.
- TALLOW. n. f. [talge, Danish.] The grease or fat of an animal; suet.
She's the kitchen wench and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light. I warrant her rags, and the tal-low in them, will burn a Lapland winter.
In Cuba and Hispaniola are killed divers thousands, whereof the Spaniards only take the tallow or the hide. Abbot.
Snuff the candles close to the tallow, which will make them run. Swift.
- To TALLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To grease; to smear with tallow.
- TALLOWCHANDLER. n. f. [tallow and chandler, Fr.] One who makes candles of tallow, not of wax.

TAM

- Nastiness, and several nasty trades, as tallowchandlers, butchers, and neglect of cleaning of gutters, are great occasions of a plague. Harvey on the Plague.
- TALLY. n. f. [from tailleur, to cut, Fr.]
1. A stick notched or cut in conformity to another stick, and used to keep accounts by.
So right his judgment was cut fit,
And made a tally to his wit. Hudibras, p. iii.
The only talents in esteem at present are those of Exchange-Alley; one tally is worth a grove of bays. Garth.
Have you not seen a baker's maid
Between two equal panniers sway'd?
Her tallies useless lie and idle,
If plac'd exactly in the middle. Prior.
From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes;
With just resentment flings it on the ground,
There take my tally of ten thousand pound. Swift.
2. Any thing made to suit another.
So suited in their minds and persons,
That they were fram'd the tallies for each other:
If any alien love had interpos'd,
It must have been an eye-fore to beholders. Dryden.
- To TALLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit; to suit; to cut out for any thing.
Nor sister either had, nor brother;
They seem'd just tally'd for each other. Prior.
They are not so well tally'd to the present juncture. Pope.
- To TALLY. v. n. To be fitted; to conform; to be suitable.
I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- TALMUD. n. f. The book containing the Jewish traditions, the rabbinical constitutions and explanations of the law.
- TALNESS. n. f. [from tall.] Height of stature; procerity.
An hideous giant, horrible and high,
That with his talness seem'd to threaten the sky. Fairy Qu.
The eyes behold so many naked bodies, as for talness of stature could hardly be equalled in any country. Hayward.
- TALON. n. f. [talon, French.] The claw of a bird of prey.
It may be said, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer talons, Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Upward the noble bird directs his wing,
And tow'ring round his master's earth-born foes,
Swift he collects his fatal flock of ire.
Lifts his fierce talon high, and darts the forked fire. Prior.
- TAMARIND tree. n. f. [tamarindus, Lat.]
The flower of the tamarind tree consists of several leaves, which are so placed as to resemble a papilionaceous one in some measure; but these expand circularly, from whose many leaved flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a flat pod, containing many flat angular seeds surrounded with an acid blackish pulp. Miller.
Lentives are cassia, tamarinds, manna. Wise's Surgery.
Lay me reclind
Beneath the spreading tamarind that shakes, Fan'd by the breeze its fever-cooling fruit. Thomson.
- TAMARISK. n. f. [tamariske, Lat.]
The flowers of the tamarisk are roseaceous, consisting of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly; from whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a pod, somewhat like those of the fallow, which opens into two parts, and contains several downy seeds. Miller.
Tamarisk is a tree that grows tall, and its wood is medicinal. Martiner's Husbandry.
- TAMBARINE. n. f. [tambourin, Fr.] A tabor; a small drum.
Calliope with mules moes,
Soon as thy oaten pipe began to sound,
Their ivory lutes and tambourines forego. Spenser's Past.
- TAME. adj. [tame, Saxon; taem, Dutch; tam, Danish.]
1. Not wild; domestic.
Thales the Milesian said, That of all wild beasts a tyrant is the worst, and of all tame beasts a flatterer. Addison.
2. Crushed; subdued; deprelled; dejected; spiritless; heartless.
If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it. Shakespeare.
And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull. Shakespeare.
A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Praise him each savage furious beast,
That on his flares do daily feast;
And you tame slaves of the laborious plough,
Your weary knees to your Creator bow. Rescommon.
3. Spiritless; unanimated: as, a tame poem. A low phrase.
- To TAME. v. n. [gatangan, Gothick; temean, Saxon; tamen, Dutch.]
1. To reduce from wildness; to reclaim; to make gentle.
Those that tame wild horses,

TAN

- Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits. Shakespeare.
2. To subdue; to crush; to deprel; to conquer.
If the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself. Shakespeare, King Lear.
They cannot tame
Or overcome their riches! not by making Baths, orchards, fish-pools, letting in of seas
Here, and then there forcing them out again. B. Johnson.
A puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece.
A race unconquer'd, by their clime made bold,
The Caledonians arm'd with want and cold,
Have been kept for you to tame. Waller.
- TAMEABLE. adj. [from tame.] Susceptive of taming.
Ganzas are supposed to be great fowls, of a strong flight, and easily tameable; divers of which may be so brought up as to join together in carrying the weight of a man. Wilkins.
- TAMELY. adj. [from tame.] Not wildly; meanly; spiritlessly.
True obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
What courage tamely could to death consent,
And not by striking first the blow prevent. Dryden.
Once a champion of renown,
So tamely can you bear the ravish'd crown? Dryden.
Has he given way?
Did he look tamely on and let them pass? Addison.
Can you love and reverence your prelate, whom you tamely suffer to be abused. Swift.
- TAMENESS. n. f. [from tame.]
1. The quality of being tame; not wildness.
2. Want of spirits; timidity.
Such a conduct must appear rather like tameness than beauty, and expose his authority to insults. Rogers.
- TAMER. n. f. [from tame.] Conqueror; subduer.
He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend. Pope.
- TAMINY. n. f. A woollen stuff.
- TAMKIN. n. f. The fopple of the mouth of a great gun.
- To TAMPER. v. a. [of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempero, Latin.]
1. To be busy with physick.
'Tis in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain,
Without trepanning of your skull
As often as the moon's at full. Hudibras, p. ii.
He tried waxes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. L'Estrange's Tables.
2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.
That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless. Decay of Piety.
'Tis dang'rous tampering with a muse,
The profits small, and you have much to lose;
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attained race. Rescommon.
Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy; but repenting next morning, repaid to the king, and discovered the whole matter; notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison's Freeholder.
3. To deal; to practise with.
Others tamper'd
For Fleet's ood, Desborough, and Lambert. Hudibras.
- To TAN. v. a. [tannen, Dutch; tannen, French.]
1. To impregnate or imbue with bark.
A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some liny soil, was tanned or turned into a kind of leather. Grew's Mus.
Black cattle produce tallow, hides, and beef; but the greatest part of the hides are exported raw for want of bark to tan them. Swift.
They sell us their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather. Swift's Miscel.
2. To imbrown by the sun.
His face all tann'd with scorching sunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a Summer's day
Through boiling sands of Araby and Ind. Fa. Qu. b. i.
Like sun parch'd quarters on the city gates,
Such is thy tann'd skin's lamentable state.
A brown for which heaven would disdain
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleveland.
- TANE for taken, ta'en.
- Two trophees tane from th' East and Western shore,
And both those nations twice triumph'd o'er. Mary's Virg.
- TANG. n. f. [tanghe, Dutch, acrid.]
1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.
Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills it also seasons; so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. South's Sermons.

It is strange that the soul should never once recal over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cask, and derive their original from that union. Locke.
2. Relish; taste. A low word.
There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Atterbury.
3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind it.
She had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a tailor, go hang. Shaksp. Temp.
4. Sound; tone: this is mistaken for tone or twang.
There is a pretty affectation in the Allemain, which gives their speech a different tang from ours. Holder.
To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.] To ring with.
Be opposite with a kinsman, furly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
TANGENT. n. f. [tangent, Fr. tangens, Lat.]
Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle so as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent. Trevoux.
Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbs, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley's Sermon.
TANGIBILITY. n. f. [tangibile, Lat.] The quality of being perceived by the touch.
TANGIBLE. adj. [from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.
Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.
By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth. Locke.
To TANGLE. v. a. [See entangle.]
1. To implicate; to knit together.
2. To enmesh; to entrap.
She means to tangle mine eyes too.
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream. Shaksp.
I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangl'd in affection to A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shaksp.
You must lay time to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhymes
Shall be full fraught with servicable vows. Shaksp.
If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the flames of war to tangle thee. Shaksp.
Now ly'th victorious
Among thy slain self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangl'd in the fold
Of dire necessity. Milton's Agonistes.
Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw Hearts after them, tangl'd in amorous nets. Milton.
With subtle cobweb cheats,
They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangl'd,
The more they stir, the more they're tangl'd. Hudibras.
3. To embroil; to embarrass.
When my simple weakness strays,
Tangl'd in forbidden ways:
He, my shepherd! is my guide,
He's before me, on my side. Crosby.
To TANGLE. v. n. To be entangled.
Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast.
TANGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A knot of things mingled in one another.
He leading swiftly rowl'd
In tangles, and made intricate seem strait,
To mischief swift. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neera's hair. Milton.
TANIST. n. f. [an Irish word; an tanisther, Erse.]
Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother, and then next to him do they chuse next of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captainry. Spenfer on Ireland.
TANISTRY. n. f. [from tanist.]
The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted thereunto by election.
If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might defend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tanistry? which makes all their possessions uncertain. Davies on Ireland.

TAP

By the Irish custom of tanistry, the chieftains of every country, and the chief of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their chiefties; and when their chieftains were dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tanists, who were elective, and purchased their elections by strong hand. Davies on Ireland.
TANK. n. f. [tanque, Fr.] A large cistern or basin.
Handle your pruning-knife with dexterity; go tightly to your business: you have cost me much, and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, rasal; fallading in the garden and water in the tank; and in holy days, the licking of a platter of rice when you deserve it. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
TANKARD. n. f. [tanquard, French; tankaard, Dutch; tancaird, Irish.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.
Hath his tankard touch'd your brain?
Sure they're fall'n asleep again. Benj. Johnson.

estate. Spectator, N^o. 475.

After having been present in public debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.
We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL. n. f. [teapl, Saxon; disfacus, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of the teasel hath no proper calyx, but leaves representing the perianthium encompassing the bottom of the head: the little flowers which are produced singly from between the scales, are collected into an head somewhat like a bee-hive; these are succeeded by longish four-cornered seeds:
the species are three: one is called carduus fullonum, and is of singular use in raising the knap upon woollen cloth. Miller.
TEASER. n. f. [from tease.] Any thing that torments by incessant importunity.

A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deaf to the best advice. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.
TEAT. n. f. [teith, Welsh; te, Saxon; tette, Dutch; teton, French.] The dug of a beast; anciently the pap of a woman.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny. Shakespeare.
Shows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.
When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer, that they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even. Milton.
Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.

The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, reach'd her teat distant Prior.
With milk, thy early food.

T E E

TE'DIOUS. adj. [tedious, Fr. tedium, Latin.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.
That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Acts xxiv. 4.
The one intente, the other still remits,
Cannot well sit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.
Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious fight of woes decays. Dryden.

2. Wearisome by prolixity.
They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour which they are not willing to endure. Hooker, b. i.
3. Slow.

Chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havock fabled knights. Milton.
TE'DIOUSLY. adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from tedious.]
1. Wearisomeness by continuance.
2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.

In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.
3. Prolixity; length.

Since brevity's the foul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. Uneasiness; tirefulness; quality of wearying.
In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often, to interrupt them; which tedious-ness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is complete. Hooker, b. i.
More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life. Donne.

She diffuses them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.

TO TEEM. v. n. [tecam, Saxon, offspring.]

A teiltree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Isa. vi. 13.

TEINT. n. f. [teinte, French.] Colour; touch of the pencil.
Glazed colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryd.

TE'LARY. adj. [tela, a web, Lat.] Spinning webs.
The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. v.

TELESCOPE. n. f. [telescope, Fr. telescop and σκοπεω.] A long gla's by which distant objects are viewed.

The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shows the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.

TELESCOPICAL. adj. [from telescope.] Belonging to a telescope; seeing at a distance.

TO TELL. v. a. preterite and part. pass. told. [tellan, Saxon;

To temper man: we had been brutes without you. Orway.

7. To

7. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.
The sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge.
In the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the other competent heat, gives it very differing tempers as to brittleness or toughness.
Repeated peals they hear,
And, in a heav'n serene, refulgent arms appear;
Red'ning the skies, and glittering all around,
The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound. Dryd.
8. To govern. A latinism.
With which the damned ghosts he governeth,
And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth. Hubbard's Tale.
TEMPER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.
Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and temper than the abundant growing of the palm trees. Raleigh.
Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries. Arbutnot.
2. Middle course; mean or medium.
If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant before the

My conscience first receiv'd a tendernefs,
Scruple, and prick, on certain speeches utter'd
By th' bishop of Bayon. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Some are unworthily censured for keeping their own, whom tendernefs how to get honestly teacheth to spend discreetly; whereas such need no great thirifness in preserving their own who assume more liberty in exacting from others. Wotton.
True tendernefs of conscience is nothing else but an awful and exact sense of the rule which should direct it; and while it steers by this compass, and is sensible of every declination from it, so long it is properly tender. South.
6. Cautious care.
There being implanted in every man's nature a great tendernefs of reputation, to be careless of it is looked on as a mark of a degenerate mind. Government of the Tongue.
7. Soft pathos of expression.
TENDINOUS. adj. [tendineus, Fr. tendinis, Latin.] Sinewy; containing tendons; consisting of tendons.
Nervous and tendinous parts have worse symptoms, and are harder of cure than fleshy ones. Wifeman.
TENDON. n. f. [tendo, Latin.] A sinew; a ligature by which the joints are moved.
A struma in her instep lay very hard and big amongst the tendons. Wifeman's Surgery.
The entrails these embrace in spiral strings,
Those clasp th' arterial tubes in tender rings;
The tendons some compacted close produce,
And some thin fibres for the skin diffuse. Blackmore.
TENDRIL. n. f. [tendrillon, French.] The clasp of a vine, or other climbing plant.
In wanton ringlets wav'd,
As the vine curls her tendrils; which imply'd Subjection. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
So may thy tender blossoms fear no bite;
Nor goats with venom'd teeth thy tendrils bite. Dryden.
The tendrils or clasps of plants are given only to such as have weak stalks, and cannot raise up or support themselves.
Ray on the Creation.

written tenent, or they hold. Position; principle; opinion.
That all animals of the land are in their kind in the sea,
although received as a principle, is a tenet very questionable.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
While, in church matters, profit shall be the touch-stone for faith and manners, we are not to wonder if no gainful tenet be deposited. Decay of Piety.
This favours of something ranker than focianism, even the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded only upon saintship. South's Sermons.
They wonder men should have mistook
The tenets of their master's book. Prior.
TENNIS. n. f. [this play is supposed by Skinner to be so named from the word tenet, take it, hold it, or there it goes, used by the French when they drive the ball.] A play at which a ball is driven with a racket.
The barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis balls. Shak.
There was he gaming, there o'ertook in's rowle,
There falling out at tennis. Shakefp. Hamlet.
A prince, by a hard destiny, became a tennis ball long to the blind goddesses.
It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to play at tennis with his page. Peacham.
The inside of the uvea is blacked like the walls of a tennis

TEN

- court, that the rays falling upon the retina may not, by being rebounded thence upon the uvea, be returned again;
for such a repercussion would make the sight more confused. More's Antidote against Atheism.
We conceive not a tennis ball to think, and consequently not to have any volition, or preference of motion to rest.
Locke.
We have no exedra for the philosophers adjoining to our tennis court, but there are alehouses. Arbutnot and Pope.
TO TENNIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive as a ball.
Those four garisons issuing forth upon the enemy, will so drive him from one side to another, and tennis him amongst them, that he shall find no where safe to keep his feet in, nor hide himself. Spenser on Ireland.
TENON. n. f. [French.] The end of a timber cut to be fitted into another timber.
Such variety of parts, solid with hollow; some with cavities as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit them. Ray.

bending. Moxon's Mech. Exercise.
TENOUR. n. f. [tenor, Lat. tenor, Fr.]
1. Continuity of state; constant mode; manner of continuity;
general currency.
We might perceive his words interrupted continually with sighs, and the tenor of his speech not knit together to one constant end, but dissolved in itself, as the vehemency of the inward passion prevailed. Sidney.
When the world first out of chaos sprang,
So smil'd the days, and so the tenor ran
Of their felicity: a spring was there,
An everlasting spring, the jolly year
Led round in his great circle, no winds breath
As now did smell of Winter or of death. Crashaw.
Still I see the tenor of man's woe
Hold on the fame, from woman to begin.
Does not the whole tenor of the divine law positively require humility and meekness to all men. Syrat.
Inspire my numbers,
Till I my long laborious work complete,
And add perpetual tenor to my rhimes,
Dedac'd from nature's birth to Caesar's times. Dryden.
This success would look like chance if it were not perpetual, and always of the same tenor. Dryden.
Can it be poison! poison's of one tenor,
Or hot, or cold. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
There is so great an uniformity amongst them, that the whole tenor of those bodies thus preserved clearly points forth the month of May. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
In such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That shunning faults, one quiet tenor keeps.
We cannot blame indeed—but we may sleep. Pope.
2. Sense contained; general course or drift.
Has not the divine Apollo said,
Is't not the tenor of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his lost child be found? Shak. Winter's Tale.
By the stern brow and warlike action,
Which she did use as the was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenor. Shakefp. As you like it.
Bid me tear the bond.
—When it is paid according to the tenor. Shakefp.

attention to the tenor of the discourse, and a perfect neglect of the divisions into chapters and verses. Locke.
3. A found in music.
The treble cutteth the air too sharp to make the found equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest part.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 173.
TENSER. adj. [tenus, Lat.] Stretched; stiff; not lax.
For the free passage of the found into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxness of the membrane will certainly dead and damp the found. Holder.
TENSE. n. f. [tensus, Fr. tensus, Lat.] [In grammar.] Tense, in strict speaking, is only a variation of the verb to signify time.
As foresight, when it is natural, answers to memory, so when methodical it answers to reminiscence, and may be called forecast; all of them expressed in the tenses given to verbs. Memory faith, I did see; reminiscence, I had seen; foresight, I shall see; forecast, I shall have seen. Grew.
Ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles are,
speak as properly and as correctly as gentlemen. Locke.
He should have the Latin words given him in their first case and tense, and should never be left to seek them himself from a dictionary. Watts.
TENSENESS. n. f. [from tense.] Contraction; tension: the contrary to laxity. Should

Gold is the closest, and therefore the heaviest, of metals, and is likewise the most flexible and tensile. Bacon.
TENSILE. adj. [tenilis, Lat.] Capable of extension.
All bodies ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires, have in them the appetite of not discontinuing.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 845.
TENSION. n. f. [tension, Fr. tenus, Lat.] The act of stretching; not laxation; the state of being stretched; not laxity.
It can have nothing of vocal found, voice being raised by stiff tension of the larynx; and on the contrary, this found by a relaxed posture of the muscles thereof. Holder.
Still are the subtle strings in tension found,
Like those of lutes, to just proportion wound,
Which of the air's vibration is the force. Blackmore.
TENSIVE. adj. [tenus, Lat.] Giving a sensation of stiffness or contraction.
From cholera is a hot burning pain; a beating pain from the pulse of the artery; a tensive pain from distention of the parts by the fulness of humours. Flyer on Humours.
TENSURE. n. f. [tenus, Lat.] The act of stretching, or state of being stretched; the contrary to laxation or laxity.
This motion upon pressure, and the reciprocal thereof, motion upon tensure, we call motion of liberty, which is,
when any body being forced to a preternatural extent, restoreth itself to the natural. Bacon.

TENSURE. n. f. [tensor, Lat. tenore, Fr. tenura, law Latin.] Tensure is the manner whereby tenements are holden of their lords. In Scotland are four tensures; the first is pura elemosina, which is proper to spiritual men, paying nothing for it, but devota animarum suffragia; the second they call feu, which holds of the king, church, barons, or others, paying a certain duty called feudi firma; the third is a holding in blanch by payment of a penny, rose, pair of gilt spurs, or some such things, if asked; the fourth is by service of ward and relief, where the heir being minor is in the custody of his lord, together with his lands, &c. and land holden in this fourth manner is called feudum de hauberk or haubert, feudum militare or loricatorum. Tensure in gross is the tenure in capite; for the crown is called a feignory in gross, because a corporation of and by itself.
The service follows the tenure of lands; and the lands were given away by the kings of England to those lords. Spenser.
The uncertainty of tenure, by which all worldly things are

He made that art which was a rage. Cowley.

10. The thing which then was.

Secure proud Nabas slept,

And dreamt, vain man, of that day's barb'rous sport. Cowley.

11. By way of eminence.

This is that Jonathan, the joy and grace,

That Jonathan in whom does must remain

All that fond mothers wish. Cowley.

Hence love himself, that tyrant of my days.

12. In THAT. As being.

Things are preached not in that they are taught, but in that they are published.

THAT, conjunction.

1. Because.

It is not that I love you less

Than when before your feet I lay

But to prevent the sad increase

Of hopeless love, I keep away. Waller.

THE

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong. Cowley.

2. Noting a consequence.

That he should dare to do me this disgrace,

Is fool or coward writ upon my face? Dryden.

The custom and familiarity of these tongues do sometimes so far influence the expressions in these epistles, that one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Lake.

3. Noting indication.

We answered, that we held it so agreeable, as we both forgot dangers past and fears to come, that we thought an hour spent with him was worth years of our former life. Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. Noting a final end.

Treat it kindly, that it may

With at least with us to stay. Cowley.

THATCH. n. f. [Saxo, Saxon; thatch, Saxon; from thac, a roof; in thandick thak. Mr. Lxx.] Straw laid upon the top of a house to keep out the weather.

Hard by a fye, beneath a roof of thatch

Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days

Baskets of fish at Billingsgate did wash. Swift.

God, whitening, oyster, mackerel, sprat, or plaice.

A plough-boy, who has never seen any thing but thatched houses, naturally imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house. Watts.

Then came rosy Health from her cottage of thatch, smart

To THATCH. v. a. [thacian, Saxon.] To cover as with straw.

Make false hairs, and thatch.

Your poor thin roofs with burthens of the dead. Shakespeare.

Moss growth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 537.

Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold

The palace thatch'd with straw. Dryden.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris

Might raise a house above two stories;

A lyric ode would flate, a catch

Would tile, an epigram would thatch. Swift.

On the cottage thatch'd, or lordly roof

Keen fastening. Thomson.

THATCHER. n. f. [thatch.] One whose trade is to cover houses with straw.

You merit new employments daily;

Our thatcher, ditcher, gard'ner, bailly. Swift.

Ash is universal timber; it serves the soldier, seaman, carpenter, thatcher, and husbandman. Mortimer.

To THAW. v. n. [thaw, Saxon; degen, Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When thy melted maid

His letter at thy pillow hath laid:

If thou beginst to thaw for this,

May my name step in. Donne.

It on firm land

Thaw's not but gathers heap, and ruin seems

Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice. Milton.

Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing. Boyle.

2. To remit the cold which had caused frost.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was congealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,

Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the ficles. Shakespeare.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,

That will be thaw'd from the true quality

With that which melteth fools. Shakespeare.

My love is thaw'd,

Which, like a waxen image gain'd a fire,

Bears no impression of the thing it was. Shakespeare.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare

From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

She can unlock

The clasp'd charm, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton.

Her icy heart is thaw'd. Granville.

THAW. n. f. [thaw, from the verb.] Liquefaction of any thing congealed; warmth such as liquifies congelation.

I was the prince's jester, and diller than a great thaw. Shakespeare.

A man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare.

Harden his stubborn heart, but still as ice

More harden'd after thaw. Milton.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all Winter, and may be heard in the next Summer, or at a great thaw. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,

A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain. Dryden.

First the tender blade peeps

THE. article. [de, Dutch.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt;

He only liv'd but till he was a man;

The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,

In the unthinking station where he fought,

But like a man he dy'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

THE

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise. Clarendon, b. viii.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,

Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

I'll march the mules Hannibal. Cowley.

The fair example of the heav'nly lark,

Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;

Above the stars let thy bold musick sound,

Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste

Brought death into the world,

Night shades the phoebes, and all in silence lie,

All but the mournful phoebes and I. Pope.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had 'st' especial engines been to rear

His fortunes up unto the state they were,

'T' adorning thee with so much art

Is but a barb'rous kill.

'Tis like the poisoning of a dart,

Too apt before to kill. Cowley.

3. Sometimes he is cut off.

In this scale worth, in 't other gold does lie. Cowley.

4. In the following passage the is used according to the French idiom.

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries. Addison on Italy.

Their nurse Euripile,

Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children. Shak.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double. Exod. xxii. 4.

THEIR. n. f. [throna, of them, Saxon.] Of them: the pronoun possessive, from they.

The round world should have shook

Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens. Shak.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccaccio, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccaccio. Dryden.

2. Their is used when any thing comes between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow, and they never in theirs to refuse. Hooker, b. v.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs. Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,

And due to theirs which out of thine will grow. Milton.

Nothing but the name of zeal appears,

'Twixt our best actions and the worth of theirs. Denham.

Vain are our neighbours hopes, and vain their cares,

The fault is more their languages than theirs. Roscommon.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues. Dryden.

And reading wish, like theirs, our fate and fame. Pope.

THE

The materials of them were not from any herb. Wilkins.

THEME. n. f. [thema, Fr. from thema.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

Every object of our idea is called a theme, whether it be a being or not being. Watts.

Two truths are told,

As happy prologues to the swelling act

Of the imperial theme. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When a soldier was the theme, my name

Was not far off. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream

My great example, as it is my theme:

Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,

With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme. Roscommon.

Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold,

Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold,

From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,

And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;

These now no more shall be the muse's themes,

Loft in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topic.

3. The original word whence others are derived.

Let scholars daily reduce the words to their original or theme, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs. Watts.

THEMSELVES. n. f. [See THEY and SELF.]

1. These very persons.

Whatever evil befalleth in that, themselves have made themselves worthy to suffer it. Hooker, b. v.

2. The oblique case of they and selves.

They open to themselves at length the way. Milton.

Waken children out of sleep with a low call, and give them kind usage till they come perfectly to themselves. Locke.

THESE. adv. [than, Gothick; than, Saxon; than, Dutch.]

3. In that case; in consequence.

Had not men been fated to be blind,

Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,

And then without a crime the crown had worn. Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

If then his providence

Out of our evil seek to bring forth good. Milton.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,

Thy jealousies and fears, and, while you may,

To peace and soft repose give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars. Milton.

One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. Leffr.

6. That time: it has here the effect of a noun.

Till then who knew

The force of those dire arms? Milton.

THENCE. n. f. [contracted, according to Minshew, from thence.]

And a well tun'd theorbo hung
Upon a bough, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd, with a strain. Butler.
THEOREM. n. f. [theoreme, Fr. θεωρημα.] A position laid down as an acknowledged truth.
Having found this the head theorem of all their discourses, who plead for the change of ecclesiastical government in England, we hold it necessary that the proofs thereof be weighed. Hooker, b. ii.
The chief points of morality are no less demonstrable than mathematics; nor is the subtilty greater in moral theorems than in mathematical. More's divine Dialogues.
Many observations go to the making up of one theorem, which, like oaks fit for durable buildings, must be of many years growth. Grant.
Here are three theorems, that from thence we may draw some conclusions. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
THEOREMATICAL. adj. [from theorem.] Comprised in the-vative, preservative, and curative. Harvey.

Medicine is justly distributed into prophylactick, or the art of preserving health; and therapeutick, or the art of restoring
it. Watt.
THERE. adv. [thar, Gothick; thar, Saxon; dar, Dutch;
der, Danish.]
1. In that place.
If they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Exil'd by thee from earth to deepest hell,
In brazen bonds shall bar'rous discord dwell;
Gigantic pride, pale terror, gloomy care,
And mad ambition shall attend her there. Pope.
2. It is opposed to here.
To see thee fight, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Could their relishes be as different there as they are here, yet the manna in heaven will suit every palate.
Darkness there might well seem twilight here. Milton.
3. An exclamation directing something at a distance.
Your fury hardens me.
A guard there; seize her. Dryden's Aurengzeer.
4. It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb: as, a man came, or there came a man.
It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times there was a great king.
For reformation of error there were that thought it a part of Christian charity to instruct them. Hooker.
There cannot in nature be a strength so great, as to make the least moveable to pass in an instant, or all together, through the least place. Digby on the Soul.
There have been that have delivered themselves from their ills by their good fortune or virtue. Suckling.
In human actions there are no degrees described, but a latitude is indulged. Bishop Taylor.
Wherever there is sense or perception, there some idea is actually produced. Locke.

Wouldst thou not eat thereafter as I like Milton.
The giver. [there and at.]
THEREAT. adv. [there and at.]
1. At that; on that account. Hooker.
Every error is a stain to the beauty of nature; for which cause it blushteth thereat, but glorieth in the contrary. Hooker.
2. At that place. [there and at.]
Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction; and many go in thereat. Mat. vii. 13.
THEREBY. adv. [there and by.] By that; by means of that;
in consequence of that. [there and by.]
Some parts of our liturgy consist in the reading of the word of God, and the proclaiming of his law, that the people may thereby learn what their duties are towards him. Hooker.
Therewith at last he forc'd him to untie
One of his grasping feet, him to defend thereby. Fa. 29.
Being come to the height, they were thereby brought to an absolute necessity. Davies on Ireland.
Dare to be true; nothing can need a lie.
A fault, which needs it most, grows two thereby. Herbert.
If the paper be placed beyond the focus, and then the red colour at the lens be alternately intercepted and let pass, the violet on the paper will not suffer any change thereby. Newton.
THEREFORE. adv. [there and fore.]
1. For that; for this; for this reason; in consequence.
This is the latest parley we will admit;
Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves. Shakespeare.
Fallstaff is dead,
And we must yern thereby. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Therefore shall a man leave father and mother and cleave to his wife. Gen. ii. 24.
The herd that seeks after sensual pleasure is soft and unmanly; and therefore I compole myself to meet a storm. Lucas.
He blusht; and therefore he is guilty. Spektator.
The wretches sprinkled dust on their bodies to give better hold: the glory therefore was greater to conquer without powder. Woff's Pindar.
2. In return for this; in recompence for this or for that.
We have forsaken all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore? Mat. xix. 27.
THEREFORE. adv. [there and from.] From that; from this.
Be ye therefore very courageous to do all that is written in the law, that ye turn not aside therefrom, to the right hand or to the left. Jos. xxiii. 6.
The leaves that spring therefrom grow white. Mortimer.
THEREIN. adv. [there and in.] In that; in this.
Therein our letters do not well agree. Shakespeare.
The matter is of that nature, that I find myself unable to serve you therein as you desire. Bacon.
All the earth
To thee, and to thy race, I give: as lords
Possess it, and all things that therein live.
After having well examined them, we shall therein find many charms. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
THEREINTO. adv. [there and into.] Into that.
Let not them that are in the countries enter therein. Luke.
Though we shall have occasion to speak of this, we will now make some entrance therein. Bacon.
THEREOF. adv. [there and of.] Of that; of this.
Considering how the case doth stand with this present age, full of tongue and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker, b. i.
Tis vain to think that lasting which must end;
And when 'tis past, not any part remains Thereof, but the reward which virtue gains. Denham.
I shall begin with Greece, where my observations shall be confined to Athens, though several instances might be brought from other states thereof. Swift.
THEREON. adv. [there and on.] On that.
You shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from;
If thereon you rely. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said; and when he thought thereon he wept. Mark xiv. 72.
Its foundation is laid thereon. Woodward.
THEREOUT. adv. [there and out.] Out of that.

THERETO. adv. [there and to, or unto.] To that.
THEREUNTO. adv. [there and unto.] To that.
Is it in regard then of sermons only, that apprehending
the gospel of Christ we yield thereunto our unfeigned assent as to a thing infallibly true. Hooker, b. v.
This sort of base people doth not for the most part rebel of themselves, having no heart thereunto, but are by force drawn by the grand rebels into their action. Spenser on Ireland.
Next thereunto did grow a goodly tree, Fairy Queen.
That whereby we reason, live and be Within ourselves we strangers are thereto. Davies.
A larger form of speech were safer than that which punctually prefixeth a constant day thereto. Brown.
What might his force have done, being brought thereto,
When that already gave so much to do? Daniel.
That it is the appointment of God, might be argument enough to persuade us thereto. Tillotson's Sermons.
THEREUPON. adv. [there and upon.]
1. Upon that; in consequence of that.
Grace having not in one thing shewed itself, nor for some few days, but in such sort so long continued, our manifold sins striving to the contrary, what can we less thereupon conclude, than that God would at least-wise, by tract of time, teach the world, that the thing which he blesteth cannot but be of him. Hooker, b. iv.
He hopes to find you forward
And thereupon he sends you this good news. Shakespeare.
Let that one article rank with the rest;

 could beat each other into good manners. Addison.
 The watchman gave to great a thump at my door, that I awaked at the knock. Tatler.
TO THUMP. v. a. To beat with dull heavy blows.
 Those bastard Britons whom our fathers
 Have in their land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd. Shakspeare.
TO THUMP. v. n. To fall or strike with a dull heavy blow.
 A stone
 Levell'd so right, it thump'd upon
 His manly paunch, with such a force
 As almost beat him off his horse. Hudibras, p. i.
 A watchman at midnight thumps with his pole. Swift.
THUMPER. n. f. [from thump.] The person or thing that thumps.
THUNDER. n. f. [Donner, German; donor, Saxon; dunder, Swedish; donder, Dutch; tonnere, Fr.]
 Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards, in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serpentine tracts, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling. Muschenbreek.
 2. In popular and poetick language thunder is commonly the noise, and lightning the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.
 I do not bid the thunder bearer shoot,
 Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shakspeare.
 No more, thou thunder master, flew Thy spite on mortal flies. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
 The revenging gods
 'Gainst paricides all the thunder bend, Shakspeare.
 The thunder
 Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
 Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
 To bellow through the vast and boundless deep. Milton.
 3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.
 So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
 On either side, that neither mail could hold Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spenser.
 Here will we face this storm of insolence,
 Nor fear the noisy thunder; let it roll,
 Then burst, and spend at once its idle rage. Rowe.
TO THUNDER. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To make thunder.
 His nature is too noble for the world:
 He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
 Nor Jove for power to thunder. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
 2. To make a loud or terrible noise.
 So soon as some few notable examples had thunder'd a duty into the subjects hearts, he soon shew'd no balencs of suspicion. Sidney, b. ii.
 His dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,
 And Hercules' two pillars standing near,
 Did make to quake and fear. Spenser.
 His dreadful voice no more
 Would thunder in my ears. Milton.
 Like a black sheet the whelming billow spread,
 Burst o'er the float, and thunder'd on his head. Pope.
TO THUNDER. v. a.
 1. To emit with noise and terrour.
 Oracles severe,
 Were daily thunder'd in our general's ears,
 That by his daughter's blood we must appease
 Diana's kindled wrath. Dryden.
 2. To publish any denunciation or threat.
 An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Ayliffe.
THUNDERBOLT. n. f. [thunder and bolt, as it signifies an arrow.]
 1. Lightning; the arrows of heaven.
 If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. Shakspeare.
 Let the lightning of this thunderbolt, which hath been so severe a punishment to one, be a terrour to all. K. Charles.
 My heart does beat,
 As if 'twere forging thunderbolts for Jove. Denham.
 Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
 The Scipio's worth, those thunderbolts of war? Dryden.

THU

The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar, is Jupiter Pluvius sending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies; which is the greatest confirmation of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.
 2. Fulmination; denunciation properly ecclesiastical.
 He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakevill on Providence.
THUNDERCLAP. n. f. [thunder and clap.] Explosion of thunder.
 The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
 One day did scorn the simple scarabee,
 Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
 That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spenser.
 When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
 The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;
 Strikes and consumes ere scarce it does appear,
 And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.
 When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
 It took us unprepared, and out of guard. Dryden.
THUNDERER. n. f. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.
 How dare you, ghosts,
 Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know,
 Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts? Shakspeare.
 Had the old Greeks discover'd your abode,
 Crete had not been the cradle of their god;
 On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
 And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born. Waller.
 When the bold Typhoeus
 Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
 The lesser gods that shar'd his prosperous state,
 All suffer'd in the exil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.
THUNDEROUS. adj. [from thunder.] Producing thunder.
 Look in and see each blissful deity.
 How he before the thunderous throne doth lie. Milton.
THUNDERSHOWER. n. f. [thunder and shower.] A rain accompanied with thunder.
 The conceit is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thunderhower, full of sulphur and darkness, with a terrible crack. Stillingfleet.
 In thunderhovers the winds and clouds are oftentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below directing the wind one way, and the cold above the clouds another. Derham's Physico-Theol.
THUNDERSTONE. n. f. [thunder and stone.] A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder; thunderbolt.
 Fear no more the lightning flash,
 Nor th' all-dreaded thunderstone. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
TO THUNDERSTRIKE. v. a. [thunder and strike.] To blast or hurt with lightning.
 I remained as a man thunderstricken, not daring, may not able, to behold that power. Sidney.
 The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
 Of goats, or timorous flock, together throng'd, Drove them before him thunderstruck. Milton.
 With the voice divine
 Nigh thunderstruck, th' exalted man, to whom
 Such high attest was giv'n, a while survey'd With wonder. Milton's Par. Reg. b. i.
 'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladus Lies stretch'd supine. Addison.
THURIFEROUS. adj. [thurifer, Lat.] Bearing frankincense.
THURIFICATION. n. f. [thuris and factio, Latin.] The act of fuming with incense; the act of burning incense.
 The several acts of worship which were required to be performed to images are processions, genuflections, thurifications, deolulations, and oblations. Stillingfleet.
THURSDAY. n. f. [thorsday, Danish; from thor. Thor was the son of Odin, yet in some of the northern parts they worshipped the supreme deity under his name, attributing the power over all things, even the inferior deities, to him. Stillingfleet.] The fifth day of the week.
THUS. adv. [thus, Saxon.]
 1. In this manner; in this wise.
 It cannot be that they who speak thus, should thus judge.
 Hooker, b. v.
 The knight him calling, asked who he was,
 Who lifting up his head, him answered thus. Fa. Qu.
 I return'd with similar proof enough,
 With tokens thus, and thus. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
 To be thus is nothing;
 But to be fairly thus. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
 I have sinned against the Lord, and thus and thus have I done. Job, viii. 23.
 That the principle that sets on work these organs, is nothing else but the modification of matter thus or thus poised, is false. Judge Hale.
 Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy griefs
 In terms becoming majesty to hear.
 I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper
 Is insolent. Dryden's Don Sebastian. Thus

THY

Thus in the triumphs of soft peace I reign. Dryden.
 All were attentive to the godlike man,
 When from his lofty couch he thus began. Dryden's En.
 2. To this degree; to this quantity.
 A counsellor of state in Spain said to his master, I will tell your majesty thus much for your comfort, your majesty hath but two enemies; whereof the one is all the world, and the other your own ministers. Bacon.
 He said thus far extend, thus far thy bounds. Milton.
 Thus much concerning the first earth, and its production and form. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 No man reasonably pretends to know thus much, but he must pretend to know all things. Tillotson's Sermons.
 This you must do to inherit life; and if you have come up thus far, firmly persevere in it. Wake.
TO THWACK. v. a. [thaccian, Saxon.] To strike with something blunt and heavy; to thresh; to bang; to belabour.
 He shall not stay;
 We'll thwack him hence with distaffs. Shakspeare.
 Nick fell foul upon John Bull, to snatch the cudgel he had in his hand, that he might thwack Lewis with it. Arbuthnot.
 These long fellows, as lightly as they are, should find their jackets well thwack'd. Arbuthnot.
THWACK. n. f. [from the verb.] A heavy hard blow.
 But Talgol first with a hard thwack
 Twice bruist his head, and twice his back. Hudibras, p. i.
 They place several pots of rice, with cudgels in the neighbourhood of each pot; the monkeys descend from the trees, take up the arms, and belabour one another with a storm of thwacks. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 50.
THWART. adj. [thwain, Saxon; thwart, Dutch.]
 1. Transverse; cross to something else.
 This else to several spheres thou must ascribe,
 Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milton.

TO THWART. v. a.
 1. To cross; to lie or come cross any thing.
 Swift as a shooting star
 In Autumn thwarts the night. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
 Yon stream of light, a thousand ways
 Upward and downward thwarting and convolv'd. Thomson.
 2. To cross; to oppose; to traverse; to contravene.
 Some sixteen months and longer might have staid,
 If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. Shakspeare.
 Laffer had been
 The thwartings of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd how you were dispos'd
 Ere they lack'd power to cross you. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
 The understanding and will never disagreed; for the proposals of the one never thwarted the inclinations of the other.
 South's Sermons.
 The rays both good and bad, of equal pow'r,
 Each thwarting other made a mingled hour. Dryden.
 In vain did I the godlike youth deplore,
 The more I begg'd, they thwarted me the more. Addison.
 Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
 Or thwart the fymd of the gods in vain. Pope's Odyssey.
TO THWART. v. n. To be opposite.
 It is easy to be imagined what reception any proposition shall find, that shall at all thwart with these internal oracles.
 Locke.
THWARTINGLY. adv. [from thwarting.] Oppositely; with opposition.
THY. pronoun. [sin, Saxon.] Of thee; belonging to thee;
 relating to thee.
 Whatever God did say,
 Is all thy clear and smooth uninterrupted way. Cowley.
 Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
 Thy fellow poet Cowley mark. Cowley.
 These are thy works, parent of good. Milton.
THYSELF. pronoun reciprocal. [thy and self.]
 1. It is commonly used in the oblique cases, or following the verb.
 Come high or low,
 Thyself and office dostly shew. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
 It must and shall be so; content thyself. Shakspeare.
 2. In poetical or solemn language it is sometimes used in the nominative.
 These goods thyself can on thyself bestow. Dryden.
THYNE wood. n. f. A precious wood.
 The merchandize of gold and all thyne wood are departed from thee. Rev. xviii. 12.
THYME. n. f. [thym, Fr. thymus, Lat.] A plant.
 The thyme hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper-lip is erect, and generally split in two, and the under-lip is divided into three parts; out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, accompanied by four embryos, which afterward become to many seeds, inclosed in a husk, which before was the flower-cup; to these marks must be added hard ligneous stalks, and the flowers gathered into heads. Miller.

TIC

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
 The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme. Dryden.
TIA. n. f. [tiare, Fr. tiara, Lat.] A dress for the head;
 a diadem.
 His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;
 Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar
 Circled his head. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
 This royal robe, and this tiara wore
 Old Priam, and this golden scepter bore
 In full assemblies. Dryden's En.
 A tiar wreath'd her head with many a fold,
 Her waste was circled with a zone of gold. Pope.
 Fairer the seem'd, distinguish'd from the rest,
 And better mien disclos'd, as better dress'd:
 A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd,
 To juster bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior.
TO TICE. v. a. [from entice.] To draw; to allure.
 Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
 Honey of roses, whither wilt thou flee?
 Hath some fond lover tie'd thee to thy bane?
 And wilt thou leave the church, and love a stie? Herbert.
TICK. n. f. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored.]
 1. Score; trust.
 If thou hast the heart to try't,
 I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
 And once more for that carcase vile Fight upon tick. Hudibras, p. i.
 When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or barter for it. Locke.
 You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.
 2. [Tique, Fr. teke, Dutch.] The louse of dogs or sheep.
 Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cressida.
 3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.
TO TICK. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To run on score.
 2. To trust; to score.
 The money went to the lawyers; council went tick. Arb.

 TICKING. } linen for bedding. Bailey.
TICKET. n. f. [etiquet, Fr.] A token of any right or debt upon the delivery of which admission is granted, or a claim acknowledged.
 There should be a paymaster appointed, of special trust, which should pay every man according to his captain's ticket, and the account of the clerk of his band. Spenser.
 In a lottery with one prize, a single ticket is only enriched, and the rest are all blanks. Collier on Envy.
 Let fops or fortune fly which way they will,
 Disdains all lots of tickets or codille. Pope.
TO TICKLE. v. a. [titillo, Lat.]
 1. To affect with a prurient sensation by slight touches.
 Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
 Can tickle where she wounds. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
 The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling some parts of the body. Bacon.
 There is a sweetness in good verse, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will. Dryden.
 It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness. Dryden.
 2. To please by slight gratifications.
 Dametas, that of all manners of stile could best conceive of golden eloquence, being withal tickled by Musidorus's praises, had his brain so turned, that he became slave to that which he that used to be his servant offered to give him. Sidney.
 Expectation tickling skittish spirits
 Sets all on hazard. Shakspeare.
 Such a nature
 Ticked with good success, disdains the shadow
 Which it treads on at noon. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
 I cannot rule my spleen;
 My scorn rebels, and tickles me within. Dryden.
 Duncce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd
 To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden.
 A drunkard, the habitual thirst after his cups, drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the least of which is such a good as he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Locke.
TO TICKLE. v. n. To feel titillation.
 He with secret joy therefore Did tickle inwardly in every vein,
 And his false heart, fraught with all treason's store,
 Was fill'd with hope, his purpose to obtain. Spenser.
 TICKLE.

TID

TICKLE, adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this word.] Tottering; unfixed; unstable; easily overthrown. When the last O'Neal began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Dunganon, was set up to hear him. Spenser on Ireland.
Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, may fight it off. Shakespeare.
The state of Normandy Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone. Shakespeare.
TICKLISH, adj. [from tickle.]
1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.
The palm of the hand, though it hath as thin a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 766.
2. Tottering; uncertain; unfixed.
Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive dissenters and mutations than England was. Bacon.
Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering a foundation as some mens fancy hath placed it, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. i.
3. Difficult; nice.
How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
Who dares most impudently not translate;
It had been civil in these ticklish times,
To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign climes. Swift.
TICKLISHNESS, n. f. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.
TICKTACK, n. f. [trickat, Fr.] A game at tables. Bailey.
TID, adj. [tydber, Saxon.] Tender; soft; nice.
To TIDDLE, v. a. [from tid.] To use tenderly; to fondle.
To TIDDER, v. n. [tyd, Saxon; tyde, Dutch and Islandick.]
1. Time; season; while.
There they alight in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide. Fairy Queen, b. i.
They two forth passing,
Received those two fair brides, their love's delight,
Which, at the appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride. Spenser.
What hath this day deserved,
That it in golden letter should be set,
Among the high tides in the calendar. Shakespeare, K. John.
At New-year's tide following the king chose him master of the horse. Watson.
2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.
That motion of the water called tides is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the Moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the Moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the Moon from East to West, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebounds back again, and so makes floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers. Locke.
3. Flood.
As in the tides of people once up there want not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon's Henry VII.
4. Stream; course.
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakespeare.
The rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea their furious tide. Milton.
But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,
Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.
Continual tide
Flows from th' exhilarating fount. Philips.
To TIDE, v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.
Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tided back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.
To TIDE, v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.
When, from his dint, the foe still backward thrunk,
Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows.
And sent them, rolling, to the tiding Humber. Philips.
TIDE GATE, n. f. [tide and gate.] A gate through which the tide passes into a basin. Bailey.
TIDE MAN, n. f. [tide and man.] A tidewater or custom-house officer, who watches on board of merchant ships till the duty of goods be paid and the ships unloaded. Bailey.
TIDE WAITER, n. f. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse.
Employments will be in the hands of Englishmen; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and tidewater places. Swift.
TIDY, adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; readily.
TIDINESS, n. f. [from tidy.] Neatness; readiness.

TIE

TYDINGS, n. f. [tydan, Saxon; to happen, to betide; tidings, Islandick.] News; an account of something that has happened.
When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,
And saw the signs that deadly tidings spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowful regret. Fairy Queen, i.
I shall make my master glad with these tidings. Shakespeare.
They win. Shakespeare.
Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heaven. Milton.
Portus, thy looks speak somewhat of importance;
What tidings dost thou bring? methinks I see Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.
The messenger of these glad tidings, by whom this covenant of mercy was proposed and ratified, was the eternal son of his bosom. Regent's Sermon.
TYDY, adj. [tydt, Islandick.]
1. Seasonable.
If weather be fair and tide, thy grain
Make speedie carriage, for fear of a raine. Taffer.
2. Neat; ready.
Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay's Pyl.
3. It seems to be here put by mistake for tidy.
Thou whorison tidy Bartholomew boar pig, when wilt thou leave fighting. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
To TIE, v. a. [tyan, tyzan, Saxon.]
1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.
Tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. Sam. vi. 7.
Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Knolles's Hist. of the Turk.
2. To knit; to complicate.
We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Barnet.
3. To hold; to fasten.
In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.
The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.
Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went as freely over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.
4. To hinder; to obstruct.
Death that hath ta'n her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue and will not let me speak. Shakespeare.
Melantius stay,
You have my promise, and my hasty word
Restraints my tongue, but ties not up my sword. Wallar.
Honour and good-nature may tie up his hands; but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only infirmities. Addison.
5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.
Although they profess they agree with us touching a precept form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hooker, b. v.
It is the coward's terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him. Sittingfleet.
They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act. Dryden.
Not tied to rules of policy, you find Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.
No one seems less tied up to a form of words. Locke.
The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at first, uneasy task; use will give it facility. Locke.
They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment. Atterbury.
A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbutnot.
6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical.
To TIE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Knot; fastening.
2. Bond; obligation.
The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect. Bacon.
No forests, caves, or savage den,
Holds more pernicious beasts than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts, they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Wallar.
TIE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Knot; fastening.
2. Bond; obligation.
The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect. Bacon.
No forests, caves, or savage den,
Holds more pernicious beasts than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts, they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Wallar.

TIL

'Tis not the coarser tie of human law
That binds their peace, but harmony itself
Attuning all their passions into love. Thomson's Spring.
TIER, n. f. [tiere, tierre, old Fr. tuger, Dutch.] A row; a rank.
Fornovius, in his choler, discharged a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them. Knolles.
TIERCE, n. f. [tiers, tiercer, Fr.] A vessel holding the third part of a pipe. Benj. Johnson.
Go now deny his tierce.
Wit, like tierce claret, when't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all;
But in its full perfection of decay
Turns vinegar, and comes again in play. Dorset.
TIERCET, n. f. [from tiers, Fr.] A triplet; three lines.
TIFF, n. f. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]
1. Liquor; drink.
I, whom griping penury furrows,
And hunger, sure attendant upon want,
With scanty offals, and small acid tiffs,
Wretched repast! my meagre corps sustain. Philips.
2. A fit of peevishness or fullness; a pet.
To TIEF, v. n. To be in a pet; to quarrel. A low word.
TIFFANY, n. f. [tiffer, to dress up, old Fr. Skinner.] Very thin silk.

TIGE, n. f. [in architecture.] The shaft of a column from the astragal to the capital. Bailey.
TIGER, n. f. [tigre, Fr. tigris, Latin.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.
When the blast of war blows in your ear,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unkind'd swiftness will, too late,
The leaden pounds to's heels. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
Tigris, in the medals of Trajan, is drawn like an old man, and by his side a tiger. Peacham on Drawing.
Has the flier,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him. Thomson's Spring.
TIGHER, adj. [tycht, Dutch.]
1. Tense; close; not loose.
If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the string will alter the centre holes. Moxon's Mech. Exercise.
I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be stifled all of a sudden. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a sash, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in. Gulliver's Travels.

Sire of her joy and source of her delight;

O! wing'd with pleasure take thy happy flight,

And give each future morn a tincture of thy white.

All manners take a tincture from our own,

Or come discolour'd through our passions shown.

Have a care lest some darling science so far prevail over your mind, as to give a sovereign tincture to all your other studies, and discolour all your ideas.

2. Extract of some drug made in spirits; an infusion.

In tinctures drawn from vegetables, the superfluous spirit of wine distilled off leaves the extract of the vegetable.

To TINCTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To imbue or impregnate with some colour or taste.

The bright sun compacts the precious stone,

Imparting radiant lustre like his own:

He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,

And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue.

A little black paint will tincture and spoil twenty gay colours.

2. To imbue the mind.

TIN

Early were our minds tinctured with a distinguishing sense of good and evil; early were the seeds of a divine love, and holy fear of offending, sown in our hearts.

To TIND. v. a. [from tind, Gothick; tendan, Saxon.] To kindle; to set on fire.

TINDER. n. f. [from tind, Gothick; tendra, Saxon.] Any thing eminently inflammable fitted to catch fire.

Strike on the tinder ho!

Give me a taper.

To these shameless pastimes were their youth admitted, thereby adding, as it were, fire to tinder.

Where sparks and fire do meet with tinder,

Those sparks more fire will still engender.

Whoever our trading with England would hinder,

To inflame both the nations do plainly conspire;

Because Irish linen will soon turn to tinder,

And wool it is greasy, and quickly takes fire.

TINDERBOX. n. f. [from tinder and box.] The box for holding tinder.

That worthy patriot, once the bellows,

And tinderbox of all his fellows.

He might even as well have employed his time in catching moles, making lanterns and tinderboxes.

TINE. n. f. [from time, Islandick.]

1. The tooth of a harrow; the spike of a fork.

In the southern parts of England they destroy moles by traps that fall on them, and strike sharp tines or teeth through them.

2. Trouble; distress.

The root whereof, and tragical effect,

Vouchsafe, O thou the mournful muse of mine,

That won't it the tragick stage for to direct,

In funeral complaints and wailful tine.

To TINE. v. a. [from tin, Saxon.]

1. To kindle; to light; to set on fire.

Strifeful Atin in their stubborn mind

Coals of contention and hot vengeance tin'd.

The clouds

Jutting or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,

Tine the flant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down,

Kindles the gummy bark of fir.

The priest with holy hands was seen to tine

The cloven wood, and pour the ruddy wine.

2. [from tin, Saxon, to shut.] To shut.

To TINE. v. n.

1. To rage; to smart.

2. To fight.

Eden stain'd with blood of many a band

Of Scots and English both, that tined on his strand.

To TINGE. v. a. [from tinge, Lat.] To impregnate or imbue with a colour or taste.

Sir Roger is something of an humourist; and his virtues as well as imperfections are tinged by a certain extravagance, which makes them particularly his.

A red powder mixed with a little blue, or a blue with a little red, doth not presently lose its colour; but a white powder mixed with any colour is presently tinged with that colour, and is equally capable of being tinged with any colour whatever.

If the eye be tinged with any colour, as in the jaundice, so as to tinge pictures in the bottom of the eye with that colour, all objects appear tinged with the same colour.

Still lays some useful bile aside,

To tinge the chyle's insipid tide;

Else we should want both gibe and satire,

And all be burst with pure good-nature.

The infusions of rhubarb and saffron tinge the urine with a high yellow.

TINGENT. adj. [from tingens, Lat.] Having the power to tinge.

This wood, by the tincture it afforded, appeared to have its coloured part genuine; but as for the white part, it appears much less enriched with the tingent property.

To TINGLE. v. n. [from tingere, Dutch.]

1. To feel a sound, or the continuance of a sound, in the ears.

This is perhaps rather tingle.

When our ear tingles, we usually say that somebody is talking of us; which is an ancient conceit.

2. To feel a sharp quick pain with a sensation of motion.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands.

3. To feel either pain or pleasure with a sensation of motion.

The sense of this word is not very well ascertained.

They suck pollution through their tingling veins.

In a palsy, sometimes the sensation of feeling is either totally abolished, or dull with a sense of tingling.

To TINK. v. n. [from tinnis, Latin; tincian, Welsh.] To make a sharp shrill noise.

TINKER. n. f. [from tink, because their way of proclaiming their trade is to beat a kettle, or because in their tink they make a tinkling noise.] A mender of old brass.

Am not I old Sly's son, by education a cardmaker, and now by present profession a tinker.

TIP

My copper medals by the pound
May be with learned justice weigh'd:

To turn the balance, Ocho's head
May be thrown in: and for the mettle

The coin may mend a tinker's kettle.

To TINKLE. v. n. [from tinter, Fr. tinnio, Latin.]

1. To make a sharp quick noise; to clink.

The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched out necks, making a tinkling with their feet.

His feeble hand a javelin threw,

Which flitting, seem'd to loiter as it flew:

Just, and but barely, to the mark it held,

And faintly tinkl'd on the brazen shield.

2. To move to the music of his tinkling bells.

3. To hear a low quick noise.

With deeper brown the grove was overspread,

A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,

And his ears tinkled, and the colour fled.

TINMAN. n. f. [from tin and man.] A manufacturer of tin, or iron tinned over.

Didst thou never pop

Thy head into a tinman's shop.

TIPPENY. n. f. A certain customary duty anciently paid to the tithingmen.

TIPSWORM. n. f. An insect.

TINNER. n. f. [from tin; tin, Saxon.] One who works in the tin mines.

The Cornish men, many of them could for a need live under ground, that were *tinner*s.

TINSEL. n. f. [from tin and sel.] A kind of shining cloth.

A *tinse*l veil her amber locks did shroud,

That strove to cover what it could not hide.

Its but a night-gown in respect of your's; cloth of gold and cuts, underborne with a bluish *tinse*l.

By 'Theis' *tinse*l slipper'd feet,

And the songs of sirens sweet.

2. Any thing shining with false lustre; any thing showy and of little value.

For favours cheap and common who would strive;

Yet scatter'd here and there I some behold,

Who can discern the *tinse*l from the gold?

If the man will too curiously examine the superficial *tinse*l good, he undecives himself to his own cost.

No glittering *tinse*l of May fair,

Could with this rod of Sid compare.

Ye *tinse*l insects, whom a court maintains,

That counts your beauties only by your stains,

Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eyes of day,

The mule's wing shall brush you all away.

To TINSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with cheap ornaments; to adorn with lustre that has no value.

Hence you phantastick possillers in song,

My text defeats your art, 'tis nature's tongue,

Scorns all her *tinse*l'd o'er in robes of varying hues,

Flattered by nothing but herself.

She, *tinse*l'd o'er in robes of varying hues,

With self-applause her wild creation views,

Sees momentary monsters rise and fall,

And with her own fool's colours gilds them all.

TINT. n. f. [from tinte, Fr. tinta, Ital.] A dye; a colour.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,

Where life awakes, and dawns at ev'ry line;

Or blend in beautiful tint the colour'd mase,

And from the canvas call the mimic face.

TINY. adj. [from tint, Danish.] Little; small; puny. A burlesque word.

Some pigeons, Davy, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws.

When that I was a little tiny boy,

A foolish thing was but a toy.

But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves,

On little females and on little loves;

Thy pigmy children, and thy tiny spouse,

The baby playthings that adorn thy house.

TIP. n. f. [from tips, Dutch.] Top; end; point; extremity.

The tip no jewel needs to wear,

The tip is jewel of the ear.

They touch the beard with the tip of their tongue, and wet it.

Thrice upon thy fingers tip,

Thrice upon thy rubied tip.

All the pleasure dwells upon the tip of his tongue.

She has fifty private amours, which nobody yet knows any thing of but herself, and thirty clandestine marriages that have not been touched by the tip of the tongue.

TIR

I no longer look upon lord Plausible as ridiculous, for admiring a lady's fine tip of an ear and pretty elbow.

To TIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To top; to end; to cover on the end.

In his hand a reed

Stood waving, tipp'd with fire.

With truncheon tipp'd with iron head,

The warrior to the lists he led.

How would the old king smile

To see you weigh the paws, when tipp'd with gold,

And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders.

Quarto's, octavo's shape the less'ning pyre,

And last a little Ajax tips the spite.

Behold the place, where if a poet

Shin'd in description, he might show it;

Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls,

And tips with silver all the walls.

Fair ermines spotless as the snows they press.

2. To strike lightly; to tap.

She writes love letters to the youth in grace,

Nay, tips the wink before the cuckold's face.

The pert jackanapes tipped me the wink, and put out his tongue at his grandfather.

A third rogue tips me by the elbow.

Their judgment was, upon the whole,

That lady is the dullest soul;

Then tips their forehead in a jeer,

As who should say, she wants it here.

When I saw the keeper frown,

Tipping him with half a crown,

Now, said I, we are alone, will be of small use at sea, in any grown weather that makes the billows to rise. Raleigh's Essays.

Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to diplode their second tire
Of thunder. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

In all those wars there were few tiremes, most of them being of one tire of oars of fifty banks. Arbutnot.

2. [Corrupted from tior or tiara, or attire.] A head-dress.
On her head she wore a tire of gold, Fairy Queen.
Adorn'd with gems and ouches.
Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers. Shakespeare.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark flame, the tire
That crowns his hated head on high, appears. Craheav.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A his from all the snaky tire went round. Pope.

3. Furniture; apparatus.
Saint George's worth
Enkindles like desire of high exploits:
Immediate sieges, and the tire of war
Rowl in thy eager mind. Phillips.

When they first peep forth of the ground, they shew their whole tire of leaves, then flowers, next seeds. Woodward.

To TIRE. v. a. [tiran, Saxon.] To fail with weariness.
1. To fatigue; to make weary; to harrafs; to wear out with labour or tediousness.
Tir'd with toil, all hopes of safety past,
From pray'rs to wishes he descends at last. Dryden.

For this a hundred voices I desire,
To tell thee what a hundred tongues would tire;
Yet never could be worthily express'd.
How deeply thou art seated in my breast. Dryden's Persius.

2. It has often out added to intend the signification.
Often a few that are stiff do tire out a greater number that are more moderate. Bacon's Essays.

A lonely way
The cheerless Albion wander'd half a day;
Tir'd out, at length a spreading stream he 'spy'd. Tickell.

3. [From attire or tire, from tiara.] To dress the head.
Jezebel painted her face and tired her head. 2 Kings ix. 30.

To TIRE. v. n. [teonun, Saxon.] To fail with weariness.
*TIRE*DNES. n. f. [from tired.] State of being tired; weariness.

It is not through the tiredness of the age of the earth, but through our own negligence that it hath not satisfied us bountifully. Hakewill on Providence.

*TIRE*SOME. adj. [from tire.] Wearisome; fatiguing; tedious.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome to the reader, the poet must sometimes relieve the subject with a pleasant and pertinent digression. Addison.

Nothing is so tiresome as the works of those critics who write in a dogmatick way, without language, genius, or imagination. Addison's Spect. No. 253.

*TIRE*SEMENESS. n. f. [from tiresome.] Act or quality of being tiresome.

*TIRE*WOMAN. n. f. [tire and woman.] A woman whose business is to make dresses for the head.

Why should they not value themselves for this outside fashionableness of the tirewoman's making, when their parents have so early instructed them to do so. Locke on Education.

*TIR*INGHOUSE. n. f. [tire and house, or room.] The room in
*TIR*INGROOM. } which players dress for the stage.

This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our tiringhouse. Shakespeare.

Man's life's a tragedy; his mother's womb,
From which he enters, is the tiringroom;
This spacious earth the theatre, and the stage
That country which he lives in; passions, rage,
Folly, and vice, are actors. Wotton.

*TIR*WIT. n. f. A bird. Ansforth.

TIS, contracted for it is. Shakespeare.

TIS destiny unthunabable.

In their glittering tissues emblaz'd
Holy memorials, acts of zeal and love, Recorded eminent. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.

A robe of tissues, stiff with golden wire;
An upper vest, once Helen's rich attire;
From Argos by the fam'd adulteress brought,
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought. Dryden.

To *TIS*SUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To interweave; to variegate.

TIT

The chariot was covered with cloth of gold tissued upon blue. Bacon's New Atlantis.

They have been always frank of their blessings to coun-enance any great action; and then, according as it should prosper, to tissue upon it some pretence or other. Wotton.

Merely will fit between,
Thron'd in celestiall sheen,
With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering. Milton.

TIT. n. f.

1. A small horse: generally in contempt.
No flooring of pasture with baggagely tit,
With ragged, with aged, and evil at hit. Tusser.

Thou might'st have ta'en example
From what thou read'st in story;
Being as worthy to sit
On an ambling tit,
As thy predecessor Dory. Denham.

2. A woman: in contempt.
What does this envious tit, but away to her father with a tale. L'Estrange.

A willing tit that will venture her corps with you. Dryden.

Short pains for thee, for me a son and heir.
Girls cost as many throes in bringing forth;
Beside, when born, the tit are little worth. Dryden.

3. A titmouse or tanit. A bird.
*TIT*B'T. n. f. [properly tidbit; tid, tender, and bit.] Nice bit; nice food.

ton. Arbutnot.

*TIT*HEABLE. adj. [from tithe.] Subject to the payment of tithes; that of which tithes may be taken.
The popish priest shall, on taking the oath of allegiance to his majesty, be entitled to a tenth part or tithe of all things titheable in Ireland belonging to the papists, within their respective parishes. Swift.

*TIT*HE. n. f. [teotha, Saxon, tenth.]

1. The tenth part; the part assigned to the maintenance of the ministry.
Many have made witty invectives against usury: they say, that it is pity the devil should have God's part, which is the tithe. Bacon.

Sometimes comes she with a tithe pig's tail,
Tickling the parson as he lies asleep,
Then dreams he of another benefice. Shakespeare.

2. The tenth part of any thing.
I have search'd man by man, boy by boy; the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before. Shakespeare.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Ev'ry tithe foul 'mongst many thousand dimes Hath been as dear as Helen. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.

3. Small part; small portion.
Offensive wars for religion are seldom to be approved, unless they have some mixture of civil tithes. Bacon.

To *TIT*HE. v. a. [teothian, Saxon.] To tax; to pay the tenth part.
When I come to the tithing of them, I will tithe them one with another, and will make an Irishman the tithingman. Spenser on Ireland.

By decimation and a tithe death,
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loaths, take thou the destin'd tenth. Shak.

When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase, the third year, the year of tithing, give unto the Levite, stranger, fatherless and widow. Deut. xxvi. 12.

To *TIT*HE. v. n. To pay tithe.
For lambe, pigs, and calf, and for other the like,
Tithe so as thy cattle the lord do not strike. Tusser.

*TIT*THING. n. f. [titthinga, law Latin, from tithe.]

1. Titthing is the number or company of ten men with their families knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for the peaceable and good behaviour of each of their society: of these companies there was one chief person, who, from his office, was called (toothingman) tithingman;
but now he is nothing but a constable. Cowel.

Poor Tom, who is whipt from titthing to titthing, and flock punished and imprisoned. Shakespeare. King Lear.

2. Tithe; tenth part due to the priest.
Though vicar be bad, or the parson evil,
Go not for thy titthing thyself to the devil. Tusser.

*TIT*THINGMAN. n. f. [titthing and man.] A petty peace officer;
an under-constable.
His hundred is not at his command further than his prince's service; and also every titthingman may control him. Spenser.

To *TIT*TILLATE. v. n. [titillo, Lat.] To tickle.
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct to ev'ry atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope.

TITILLATION

TIT

TITILLATION. n. f. [titillation, French; titillatio, Lat. from titillare.]

1. The act of tickling.
Tickling causeth laughter: the cause may be the emission of the spirits, and so of the breath, by a slight from titillation. Bacon.

2. The state of being tickled.
In sweets the acid particles seem so attenuated in the oil as only to produce a small and grateful titillation. Arbutnot.

3. Any slight or petty pleasure.
The delights which result from these nobler entertainments our cool thoughts need not be ashamed of, and which are dogged by no such sad sequels as are the products of those titillations, that reach no higher than the senses. Glanville.

*TIT*LARK. n. f. A bird.
The smaller birds do the like in their seasons; as the leverock, titlark, and linnets. Walton.

*TIT*LE. n. f. [titelle, old Fr. titulus, Lat.]

1. A general head comprising particulars.
Three draw the experiments of the former four into titles and tables for the better drawing of observations; these we call compiles. Bacon.

Among the many preferences that the laws of England have above others, I shall single out two particular titles, which give a handsome specimen of their excellencies above other laws in other parts or titles of the same. Hale.

2. An appellation of honour.
To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly? Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Man over men
He made not lord: such title to himself Reserving. Milton.

3. A name; an appellation.
My name's Macbeth.
The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Ill worthy I such title should belong
To me transgressor. Milton.

4. The first page of a book, telling its name and generally its subject; an inscription.
This man's brow, like to a title leaf,
Foretells the nature of a tragick volume. Shakespeare.

Our adversaries encourage a writer who cannot furnish out so much as a title page with propriety. Swift.

5. A claim of right.
Let the title of a man's right be called in question; are we not bold to rely and build upon the judgment of such as are famous for their skill in the laws? Hooker.

Is a man impoverished by purchase? it is because he paid his money for a lye, and took a bad title for a good. South.

'Tis our duty
Such monuments, as we can build, to raise;
Left all the world prevent what we should do,
And claim a title in him by their praise. Dryden.

To revenge their common injuries, though you had an undoubted title by your birth, you had a greater by your courage. Dryden.

Conti would have kept his title to Orange.
O the discretion of a girl! she will be a slave to any thing that has not a title to make her one. South.

To *TIT*LE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entitle; to name; to call.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame,
Ignobly! Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

*TIT*LELESS. adj. [from titile.] Wanting a name or appellation. Not in use.
He was a kind of nothing, titileless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name o' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

*TIT*LEPAGE. n. f. [title and page.] The page containing the title of a book.
We should have been pleas'd to have seen our own names at the bottom of the titlepage. Dryden.

*TIT*MOUSE, or tit. n. f. [tit, Dutch, a chick or small bird; titlingier, Islandick, a little bird: tit signifies little in the Teutonick dialects.] A small species of birds.
The nightingale is sovereign of song,
Before him fits the titmouse silent be,
And I unfit to thrust in skilful throng,
Should Colin make judge of my foolerie. Spenser.

The titmouse and the peckers hungry brood,
And Progne with her bosom stain'd in blood. Dryden.

To *TIT*TER. v. n. [formed, I suppose, from the found.] To laugh with restraint; to laugh without much noise.
In flow'd at once a gay embroider'd race,
And titting push'd the pedants off the place. Dunciad.

*TIT*TER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A restrained laugh.

2. I know not what it signifies in Tusser.

TO

If care be not forth, it will rise againe fine.

*TIT*TLE. n. f. [I suppose from tit.] A small particle; a point;
a dot.
In the particular which concerned the church, the Scots would never depart from a tittle. Clarendon, b. viii.

Angels themselves disdain
T' approach thy temple, give thee in command
What to the smallest tittle thou shalt say
To thy adorers. Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

They thought God and themselves linked together in to fast a covenant, that although they never performed their part, God was yet bound to make good every tittle of his. South's Sermons.

Ned Fashion hath been bred about court, and understands to a tittle all the punctilios of a drawing-room. Swift.

*TIT*TLETATTLE. n. f. [A word formed from tattle by a ludicrous reduplication.] Idle talk; prattle; empty gabble.
As the foe drew near
With love, and joy, and life and dear,
Our don, who knew this tittletattle,
Did, sure as trumpet, call to battle. Prior.

For every idle tittletattle that went about, Jack was suspected for the author. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

To *TIT*TLETATTLE. v. n. [from tattle.] To prate idly.
You are full in your tittletattlings of Cupid: here is Cupid, and there is Cupid: I will tell you now what a good old woman told me. Stacey, b. ii.

*TIT*UBATION. n. f. [titubo, Lat.] The act of stumbling.

*TIT*ULAR. adj. [titularis, Fr. from titulus, Lat.] Nominal; having or concerning only the title.
They would deliver up the kingdom to the king of England to shadow their rebellion, and to be titular and painted head of those arms. Bacon's Henry VII.

Thrones, virtues, powers,
If these magnifick titles yet remain,
Not merely titular. Milton.

Both Valerius and Austin were titular bishops. Ayliffe.

*TIT*ULARITY. n. f. [from titular.] The state of being titular.
Julius, Augustus, and Tiberius, with great humility received the name of imperator; but their successors retain the same even in its titularity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

*TIT*ULARY. adj. [titulaire, Fr. from titulus, Lat.]

1. Consisting in a title.
The malecontents of his kingdom have not been base nor titulary impostors, but of an higher nature. Bacon's H. VII.

2. Relating to a title.
William the conqueror, howsoever he used the power of a conqueror to reward his Normans, yet mixed it with a titulary pretence, grounded upon the confessor's will. Bacon.

*TIT*ULARY. n. f. [from the adj.] One that has a title or right.
The persons deputed for the celebration of these masses were neither titularies nor perpetual curates, but persons entirely conduictious. Ayliffe's Pervogon.

*TIT*VE. adj. [A word expressing speed, from tantivy, the note of a hunting horn.]

In a bright moon-shine while winds whistle loud,
Trey, troy, troy, we mount and we fly,
All rocking in a downy white cloud;
And left our leap from the sky should prove too far,
We slide on the back of a new-falling star. Dryden.

To. adv. [to, Saxon; te, Dutch.]

1. A particle coming between two verbs, and noting the second as the object of the first.
The delay of our hopes teaches us to mortify our desires. Smallbridge.

2. It notes the intention.

- TOO. adv. [to, Saxon.]
1. Over and above; overmuch; more than enough. It is used to augment the signification of an adjective or adverb to a vicious degree.
Groundless prejudices and weaknesses of conscience, instead of tenderness, mislead too many others, too many, otherwise good men. Sprat's Sermons.
It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of scripture. Locke.
These ridiculous stories abide with us too long, and too far influence the weaker part of mankind. Watts.
2. It

2. It is sometimes doubled to encrease its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside. Oh, that this too solid flesh would melt. Shakespeare. Sometimes it would be full, and then Oh! too soon decrease again; Eclips'd sometimes, that 'twould so fall, There would appear no hope at all. Suckling.
3. Likewise, also. See what a scourge is laid upon your hate; And I, for winking at your discords too, Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet. Let on my cup no wars be found, Left those incite to quarrels too, Which wine itself enough can do. Oldham. The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other men's sins, is evident from the text and from experience too. South's Sermons. It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours. Locke. Let those eyes that view The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope. Took, the preterite, and sometimes the participle passive of take. Thy soldiers All levied in my name, have in my name Took their discharge. Shakespeare. King Lear. He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations. South's Sermons. Suddenly the thunder-clap Took us unprepared. Dryden. The same device enclosed the ashes of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took, though at first it received its rise from such a particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously. Addison. This took up some of his hours every day. Spektator. The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's huntmen, upon a large courser, took my foot, shoe and all. Swift. Leaving Polybus, I took my way To Cyrrha's temple. Pope's Statius. Took, n. f. [tol, tool, Saxon.] 1. Any instrument of manual operation. In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only, into which if you cut a little it will come forth; but if you pierce it deeper with a tool it will be dry. Bacon. Arm'd with such guarding tools as art, yet rude, Guileless of fire had form'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix. The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools. Addison. 2. A hiring; a wretch who acts at the command of another. He'd choose To talk with wits in dirty shoes; And scorn the tools with flars and garters, So often seen careering Chaires. Swift. To Took, v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation: perhaps tozan, Saxon, contracted from tozcan, to know or examine.] To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and slyly. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete. I cast to go a shooting, Long wand'ring up and down the land, With bow and bolts on either hand, For birds and bushes tooting. Spenser's Past. Took, n. f. plural teeth. [tooth, Saxon; tand, Dutch.] The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; they are formed in the cavities of the jaws, and about the seventh or eighth month after birth they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw, tear the periostrum and gums, which being very sensible create a violent pain: the dentes incisivi, or fore teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw, because they are the thinnest and the sharpest; after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders, because they are thickest and bluntest: about the seventh year of age they are thrust out by new teeth which then begin to sprout, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have been observed to shed their teeth twice: about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentes sapientia. Avaunt, you curs! Be thy mouth or black or white, Shakespeare. King Lear. Tooth that poisons if it bite. Defert delivers with characters of brass A fortified residence against the tooth of time, And razure of oblivion. Shakespeare. The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unfighly length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out. Ray on the Creation.

TOO

2. Taste; palate. These are not dishes for thy dainty tooth; What, hast thou got an ulcer in thy mouth? Why stand'st thou picking? Dryden. 3. A tine, prong, or blade, of any multifid instrument. The priests servant came while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh hook of three teeth. 1 Sam. ii. 13. I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whose teeth, being in number sixteen, were about an inch and an half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide. Newton's Opticks. 4. The prominent part of wheels, by which they catch upon correspondent parts of other bodies. The edge whereon the teeth are is always made thicker than the back, because the back follows the edge. Mason. In clocks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled will hardly move, though you dog them with never so much weight; but apply a little oil they whirl about very swiftly with the tenth part of the force. Ray. 5. TOOTH and nail. With one's utmost violence; with every means of attack or defence. A lion and bear were at tooth and nail which should carry off a fawn. L'Estrange's Fables. 6. To the TEETH. In open opposition. It warms the very sickness in my heart, That I shall live and tell him to his teeth, Thus diddest thou. Shakespeare's Hamlet. The action lies In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd, Ev'n to the teeth and forehead of our faults, To give in evidence. Shakespeare. The way to our horses lies back again by the houle, and then we shall meet 'em full in the teeth. Dryden. 7. To cast in the TEETH. To insult by open exprobration. A wife body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his fond and foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might cast him therewith in the teeth, saying, were it not for me thou wouldst freeze, and not be able to heat thyself. Hosker, b. iv. 8. In spite of the teeth. Notwithstanding threats exprest by shewing teeth; notwithstanding any power of injury or defence. The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the popery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakespeare. The only way is not to grumble at the lot they must bear in spite of their teeth. L'Estrange. To TOOTH, v. a. [from tooth.] 1. To furnish with teeth; to indent. Then faws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryden. The point hooked down like that of an eagle; and both the edges toothed, as in the Indian crow. Grew's Museum. Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger and toothed at the end. Mortimer's Husbandry. 2. To lock in each other. It is common to tooth in the stretching course two inches with the stretcher only. Mason's Mech. Exercis. TOOTHACH, n. f. [tooth and ach.] Pain in the teeth. There never yet was the philosopher That could endure the toothach patiently, However at their ease they talk'd like gods. Shakespeare. He that sleeps feels not the toothach. Shakespeare. Cymbeline. I have the toothach. —What, sigh for the toothach? Which is but an humour or a worm. Shakespeare. One was grown desperate with the toothach. Temple. TOOTHDRAWER, n. f. [tooth and draw.] One whose business is to extract painful teeth. Nature with Scots, as toothdrawers, hath dealt, Who use to string their teeth upon their belt. Cleveland. When the teeth are to be dislocated, a toothdrawer is consulted. Wiseeman's Surgery. TOOTHED, adj. [from tooth.] Having teeth. TOOTHLESS, adj. [from tooth.] Wanting teeth; deprived of teeth. Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheek she draws, Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden. They are fed with flesh minced small, having not only a sharp head and snout, but a narrow and toothless snout. Ray. TOOTH-PICK, n. f. [tooth and pick.] An instrument by which the teeth are cleaned from any thing sticking between them. I will fetch you a toothpicker from the farthest inch of Asia. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing. He and his toothpick at my worship's meals. Shakespeare. Preserve my woods, whereof, if this course hold, there will hardly be found in some places enough to make a toothpick. Hovel's England's Tears. Lentick excels; if toothpicks of the lentick be wanting, of a quill then make a toothpick. Sandys. Lentie

TOP

- Lentie is a beautiful ever-green, and makes the best tooth-pickers. Mortimer's Husbandry. TOOTH-SOME, adj. [from tooth.] Palatable; pleasing to the taste. TOOTHWORT, n. f. [dentaria, Lat.] A plant. The toothwort hath a fleshy root, which is fealy, and cut in, as it were, with teeth: the flower consists of four leaves, placed in form of a cross; this is succeeded by a long pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, and when ripe twisted up like a screw, and discharges the seeds with violence. Miller. TOP, n. f. [topp, Welsh; top, Saxon; top, Dutch and Danish; toppe, a crest, Islandick.] 1. The highest part of anything. I should not see the fandy hour-glass run, But I should think of shallows and of flats, And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand, Vailing her high top lower than her ribs. Shakespeare. He wears upon his baby brow the round And top of sovereignty. Shakespeare. Macbeth. Here Sodom's tow'rs raise their proud tops on high, The tow'rs as well as men outbrave the sky. Cowley. Thou nor on the top of old Olympus dwell'st. Milton. That government which takes in the content of the greatest number of the people, may justly be said to have the broadest bottom; and if it terminate in the authority of one single person, it may be said to have the narrowest top, and so makes the firmest pyramid. Temple. Syphilus no sooner carries his stone up to the top of the hill but it tumbles to the bottom. Addison. So up the steepy hill with pain The weighty stone is rowl'd in vain; Which having touch'd the top recoils, And leaves the labourer to renew his toils. Granville. Marine bodies are found upon hills, and at the bottom only such as have fallen down from their tops. Woodward. 2. The surface; the superficies. Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth hurt all things that grow by them, especially such trees as spread their roots near the top of the ground. Bacon's Nat. Hist. Shallow brooks that flow'd so clear, The bottom did the top appear. Dryden. 3. The highest place. He that will not set himself proudly at the top of all things, but will consider the imminency of this fabric, may think, that in other manions there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke. What must he expect, when he seeks for preferment, but universal opposition, when he is mounting the ladder, and every hand ready to turn him off when he is at the top? Sw. 4. The highest person. How would you be, If he, which is the top of judgment, should But judge you as you are? Shakespeare. Measure for Measure. 5. The utmost degree. Zeal being the top and perfection of so many religious affections, the caules of it must be most eminent. Sprat. If you attain the top of your desires in fame, all those who envy you will do you harm; and of those who admire you few will do you good. Pope. The top of my ambition is to contribute to that work. Pope. 6. The highest rank. Take a boy from the top of a grammar school, and one of the same age bred in his father's family, and bring them into good company together, and then see which of the two will have the more manly carriage. Locke on Education. 7. The crown of the head. All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall On her ingrateful top! Am'd, say you? —Am'd, my lord. —Am'd, my lord. From top to toe? 'Tis a per'lous boy, Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable; He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakespeare. Let's take the infant by the forward top; For we are old, and on our quick'fit decrees Th'inaudible and noiseless foot of time Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare. 8. The head of a plant. The buds made our food are called heads or tops; as cabbage heads. Watts's Logick. 9. [Top, Danish.] An inverted conoid which children set to turn on the point, continuing its motion with a whip. Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately. Shakespeare.

TOP

- For as whipp'd tops, and banded balls, The learned hold, are animals: So horses they affirm to be Mere engines made by geometry. Hudibras, p. i. As young striplings whip the top for sport On the smooth pavement of an empty court, The wooden engine flies and whirls about, Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden. Still humming on their drowsy course they keep, And lash'd to long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope. A top may be used with propriety in a similitude by a Virgil, when the sun may be dishonoured by a Mævius. Broome. 1. Top is sometimes used as an adjective to express lying on the top, or being at the top. 1. A sudden stream raised by summer showers.
The near in blood,
Forfake me like the torrent of a flood. Sandys on Job.

Will no kind flood, no friendly rain,
Disguise the marshal's plain disgrace;
No torrents swell the low Mohayne,
The world will say he durst not pass. Prior.

2. A violent and rapid stream; tumultuous current.
Not far from Caucasus are certain steep falling torrents, which wash down many grains of gold, as in many other parts of the world; and the people there inhabiting use to set many fleeces of wool in these descents of waters, in which the grains of gold remain, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witnesseth to be true. Raleigh.

The memory of those who, out of duty and confidence, opposed that torrent which did overwhelm them, should not lose the recompence due to their virtue. Clarendon.

When shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay,
The wary ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
Undams his wat'ry stores, huge torrents flow,
Temp'ring the thirsty fever of the field. Dryden's Georg.

Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a bar'rous age. Pope.

TORRENT. adj. [torrens, Lat.] Rolling in a rapid stream.

Fierce Phlegeton,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage. Milton.

TORRID. adj. [torride, Fr. torridus, Lat.]

Lost in trackless fields of shining day,
Unable to discern the way,
Which Nature's virtue only could explore. Prior.
- TRACT. n. f. [tractus, Lat.]
1. Any kind of extended substance.
2. A region; a quantity of land.
Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains, are barred from air and fresh wind. Raleigh.
Heav'n hides nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell. Milton.
Monte Circeo, by Homer call'd Æsea, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth. Addison.
3. Continuity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.
The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is that for so long a tract of time she should still continue fresh. Hewel.
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we. Milton.
As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity by some more evident word discerned by his eye, know the sense. Helder.
4. Course; manner of process; unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.
The tract of every thing
Would, by a good discourse, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
5. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for track.
The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shakespeare.
6. [Tractatus, Lat.] A treatise; a small book.
The church clergy at that time writ the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared. Swift.
- TRACTABLE. adj. [tractabilis, Lat. tractable, Fr.]
1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable;
governable.
For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruit, which affliction likewise hath, when-soever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith. Hosker, b. v.
Noble Ajax, you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.
Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
- Tractable obedience is a slave
To each incens'd will. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou too. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on in an evil course; so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them. Tillotson's Sermon.
If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit to it.
Locke on Education.
2. Palpable; such as may be handled.
The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt. Helder on Time.
- TRACTABLENESS. n. f. [from tractable.] The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.
It will be objected, that whatsoever I fanly of childrens tractableness, yet many will never apply. Locke.
- TRACTATE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.
Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are their reasons usually introduced. Brown.
We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate. Hali.
- TRACTION. n. f. [from tractus, Lat.] The act of drawing;
the state of being drawn.
The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inwards to bring the trion of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and so gives a tension to the tympanum. Helder.
- TRACTILE. n. f. [tractilis, Lat.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length; ductile.
The consistencies of bodies are very divers; fragile, tough;
flexible, inflexible; tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, intractile. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 839.
- TRACTILITY. adj. [from tractile.] The quality of being tra-ctile.
Silver,

TRA

- Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferior to those of gold, was drawn out to a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet. Derham.
- TRADE. n. f. [trattia, Italian.]
1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods; or for money.
Whoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whosoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself. Raf.
Trade increases in one place and decays in another. Temple.
2. Occupation; particular employment whether manual or mercantile; distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.
Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold a certain trade of life; the which trade he shall be bound to follow. Spenser on Ireland.
How dizzy! half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade. Shakespeare.
I'll mountebank their loves, and come home below'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakespeare.
The rude Equicole
Hunting their sport, and plund'ring was their trade. Dryden.
Eight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade. Dryden's Jew.
The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death, that deal in steel for gains. Dryden.
The emperor Pertinax applied himself in his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way;
the son was obstinate in pursuing so profitable a trade, a sort of merchandise of wood. Arbutnot on Coins.
3. Instruments of any occupation.
The shepherd bears
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden's Virgil.
4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.
Call some of young years to train them up in that trade;
and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.
- TO TRADE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.
He commanded these servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading. Luke xix. 15.
Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port, where nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded. Arbutnot on Coins.
Maximianus traded with the Goths in the product of his estate in Thracia. Arbutnot.
2. To act merely for money.
Saucy and overbold! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare. Macbeth.
3. Having a trading wind.
They on the trading flood ply tow'd the pole. Milton.
- TO TRADE. v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.
They were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market. Ezek. xxvii. 13.
- TRADE-WIND. n. f. [trade and wind.] The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropics.
Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;
A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore. Dryden.
His were the projects of perpetuum mobiles, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds. Arbutnot.
Comfortable is the trade-wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous. Cheyne.
